The city of Washington is only a few feet above sea level, and every-one except those who have been born and bred in Dixie find the climate of the Capital city very difficult during the heat of summer. During week-ends the President gathers up a party of friends and they motor into the mountains of the Shenandoah, nearly three thousand feet above sea level. Sand flies, mosquitoes and fish bite with avidity in these high altitudes. Mr. Hoover comes back to the White House grounds every Monday fore-freshed by the brief vacation! He loves his fishing camp—and from all accounts the recreation supplies him with plenty of energy of the kind needed for his big job.
