NEW SHORT STORIES

Stories of Sarah Jennings. Sarah Jennings, wife of the first Duke of Marlborough, is famous in history for many things, among them being her violent temper. After ber great husband's death Sarah spent the remaining years of her life in quarreling with her daughters and marrying her granddaughters. One of the latter. the Duchess of Manchester, a special favorite of the old duchess, had a sharp tongue also. Her mother and grandmother had long been at variance. "My sweet duchess," said the elder woman to her one day in an overflow of kindness, "you were always the best of God's creatures, and I love you mightily, but you have a mother." "Yes, and she has a mother," came the quick reply. Sarah's revenge on Lady Bateman, who had offended her, is amusing. She possessed a portrait of Lady Bateman, which she made the means of her vengeance. "She did not give it away," says Louisa Stuart, who tells the story, "nor sell it to a broker, nor send it up to a lumber garret, nor even turn it to the wall. She had the face blackened over and this sentence, 'She is much blacker within,' inscribed in large characters on the frame, and, thus placed in her usual sitting room, it was exhibited to all beholders." Walking Skirts.

The fashion of short walking skirts is a boon, but does not seem to have met with popular favor enough to have been adopted for the smarter cloth gowns. These are still long enough to trail considerably. The sheathlik skirt is much modified, and the gore skirt with circular side and a little fullness just at the back is much more o a favorite. There are skirts with one two or three flounces, but the plain skirts with tremendous flare and trimmed with the flat trimmings are made in the handsomest materials. Velve bands trim many gowns, while stitched bands of silk or satin still remain in fashion and are used on the handsom est of velvet gowns for the street and on the embroidered lace gowns for evening wear. Both rough and smooth cloths are used, the rough, shagg; ones for morning and made short, the smooth cloths for afternoon and rath er smarter wear made long.-Harper's

Winter Horseshoeing. Speaking of an icy time reminds us that the horses should be shod so that they can be prepared to travel in such a case, says American Cultivator. Elther have them rough shod before such a season comes, or, if they have not far to go at a time or heavy loads to draw. they may be worked without shoes in uce to market over the paved streets of the city. Many a good horse have we seen badly injured by slipping and straining, though he did not fall, while the number killed because of broken legs, that might not have been broken if they had been properly shod, is great every winter.

When to Begin.

The fall is a very good time to begin the poultry business. Buying fowls in the fall when they may be bought cheap is a surer and better way for the been more beginner than to buy eggs in the spring.
