AN EASY GARDEN.
One That Any Plain, Practical Farmer May Cultivate With Profit.
A good garden, meaning one that furnishes a supply of vegetables in abundant quantity and liberal variety throughout the growing season, with a final harvest home for the winter stock, is what everybody who lives in the country wants. Such a garden, grown and cared for in the easiest and cheapest way, is what every farmer might have, but not what every farmer actually obtains. The garden of which I see most in a very good illustration of this kind of garden, the one that every plain practical farmer may cultivate with profit for his own pocket and much satisfaction for all who eat at his table.

This cheap and easy garden is favorably situated, to begin with. The soil is good and the ground free from stones. It slopes slightly toward the south and is protected from north winds by buildings, trees and at a little distance a low hill. It contains about three-quarters of an acre and furnishes two families with a practically unlimited production of the fresh vegetables of the best quality and some fruit.

Laid out entirely in long lines, the rows far enough apart for going through with a cultivator, horsepower is relied upon almost exclusively for the culture of this garden. It has the same good, thorough attention that the neighboring cornfield gets and little more. Clean tillage and frequent stirring of the soil are a matter of course, but with no refinements of the gardening art, nothing done for show or mere appearance. A sober, steady old farm horse and an equally steady plowman march up and down the long rows often enough to prevent any big weeds from exhausting the fertility of the soil.

The ground is well manured, plowed and harrowed in the spring. It is marked off in long lines and cultivation kept up, with room left for successive plantings of the more important garden crops. Last year delicious green peas were picked for thirty successive days. Green corn lasted still longer. From the first radish and the early spinach and lettuce to the last tomato and last mess of lima beans the season easily covers more than half the year, and during all this time the garden provides a very important share of the food supply, important to health and comfort and also from the point of view of dollars and cents.

The garden in question has two rows of raspberries and two of straw-berry well in it, but for some reason the Hubbard squash has been a failure. The homey cabbage thrives, but not the more elegant and dainty cauliflower. Celery we do have up to late winter and plenty of parsnips left in the ground for the following early spring.

This garden is not like a patent medicine—warranted to please everybody. Some would not be satisfied without more. Others content themselves with much less. For its planning and general oversight this garden depends upon a woman, concludes Dorothy in Country Gentlemen.

When Frogs Are Best.
Frogs' legs are sold in Paris daintily threaded on little willow wands. People buy them for the home table instead of, as is the practice in this country, cutting them up exclusively to restrain their appetite. They make a most palatable broth for invalids and convalescents, but ordinarily the legs are prepared by removing the skin, rolling them in flour, adding salt, pepper and butter, with a pinch of parsley, and cooking them gently in a frying pan or on a griddle. By Parisians it is considered that the frog is best in the fall of the year, when it is fattest and most delicate. However, large numbers of the batrachians are caught in the spring, when they are said to be more easily captured.—Saturday Evening Post.

Thought It Was Bargain Day.
Mr. Clouess had been out walking. He returned home tired and cross, "but what I might have expected," he whined. "I gave the only 10 cents I had in my pocket to a beggar, and it started to rain, and I had to walk home. Don't ever talk to me about the rewards of Providence." "And did you suppose Providence would postpone a shower of rain," his wife asked, "because you gave 10 cents to a beggar? You weren't expecting much for your money, were you?"—New York Commercial Advertiser.

How He Spotted It.
He—I thought you looked charming last night. She—Oh, now, did you really? He—Yes, why, I could hardly believe it was you.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Nasal Catarrh.
In all its stages this terrible disease should be cleansed. Ely's Cream Balm cleanses, soothes and heals the nasal membrane. It treats catarrh and drives away a cold in the head quickly. Cream Balm is placed into the nostrils, spreads over the membrane and is absorbed. Relief is immediate and a cure follows. It is not drying—does not produce sneezing. Large Size, 50 cents at Druggists; by mail, Trial Size, 10 cents by mail.
