LOWER COURT SUSTAINED

The verdict of the jury and judgment of this court in favor of the Reading Iron Company, defendant, in the case of Joseph Baran and wife was sustained by the supreme court in an opinion handed down yesterday. James Scarler, Esq., argued the case for the company before the supreme court.

This case, which was tried in November, 1900, is one of fourteen cases brought against the Reading Iron Company to determine its liability for the injuries caused by the explosion of a steam boiler at its works at this place on October 8, 1896. One portion of the boiler, it will be recalled, ploughed through the dwelling of Joseph Baran on Northumberland street, causing the death of a child. The case of the Barans was a leading one and was tried as a test in the court below. Damages were claimed in the amount of $20,000. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the company. It was taken to the supreme court on alleged error in the trial below.

The case, which was ably tried, was one which attracted wide spread attention. The intense excitement attending the explosion to this day remains fresh in the minds of the people, while the verdict of the jury and the appeal of the plaintiffs to the supreme court were matters of absorbing interest to the public. The judgment of the supreme court, therefore, was news very eagerly awaited.

The plaintiffs alleged that the cause of the accident was the negligence of the company and brought suit on that ground. The company defended on the ground that there was no negligence and that the cause of the explosion was unknown. The plaintiffs failed to convince the jury that there was any negligence and the jury decided against them. The judgment of the supreme court sustains the verdict of the jury.

THE COLUMBIA GUARDS

The articles printed in these columns relating to the return of the Columbia Guards has brought out several other relics of that band of famous fighters in the war with Mexico in our country justly taken such a pride.

Our townsman, John G. Brown, possesses the drum which accompanied the Columbia Guards to the land of the Montezumas and on which through their stirring campaign was beat the tattoo which at night sent them to their quarters and on which at morn was sounded the reveille which summoned them to the toilsome march or the conflict of battle. Except that it is somewhat higher the drum differs but little from those in use at later times. It bears the marks of hard service and is a most venerable relic which increases in interest with each succeeding year as the last of the few survivors who responded to its call one by one pass to the other world.

The old drum has a fine companion relic in a handsomely printed program of the military and civic procession to receive and welcome the Columbia Guards and Wyoming Artillerists, which has been carefully preserved by our townsman, Robert D. Magill.

The parade, which took place Thursday, July 27, 1898, seems to have been quite an imposing affair. The military of Columbia, Northumberland, Union, Lycoming and Luzerne counties under command of Major General Greene, Brigadier General Watson and other general officers formed the first division. The arrival of the volunteers and the movement of the column was announced by a field piece furnished by Captain Hugh McWilliams of Liberty township under the command of Lieutenant John McWilliams of the Liberty Artillerists.

The welcoming address was delivered by J. Cooper, Esq.

MARATA.

One day I walked about our camp in the vest with the Indians when my eyes fell upon the face of a young girl of her band. I happened to be near one of the mess fires where the men were cooking supper, and one of them used some coarse ribaldry in his reference to Marata, for such was her name. Quick as a flash one of my companions, Edward Holson, a young giant of a plainsman, sprang at him with the ferocity of a tiger, and thereupon the careless scoundrel carried a gap in his teeth as a memento of his rashness.

One day late in July the sun had dropped so low that there were the grateful shadows of the hills to the westward, and the small mess fires were beginning to show their yellow glare among the trees in preparation for the evening meal. Robson was talking earnestly with Marata.

"As you know where I can talk to you as I want?" he asked in the Navajo tongue. "You know I love you, Marata, and that I shall make you my wife when I get my discharge, and I shall be happy then together. But it is long to wait, and must see you and talk to you of the plans I have for our lives."

He told her that he was to be on picket duty that night, and she consented to join him and fly with him. Their signal was to be the howl of a coyote.

When they were gone, another figure, crouched in a clump of bushes, straightened itself from its cramped position and raised its hand with a savage gesture.

The Indian Wild Horse, who had slipped into this concealment, where he could hear the lovers' intercourse and Marata's promise.

When Robson went to his post on picket duty that night, it was with heart beating high and eyes kindled with a gleam of satisfaction.

With a step as light as a boy's he paced back and forth, back and forth, humming to himself beneath his breath the melody of a fervid Spanish love song.

"I'm 9 o'clock," he said impatiently at length. "That means a long wait yet, for she said she would not come until all was quiet, but I would wait for years if I expected her to come at last."

"Hark! A dreary, dismal howl came to him at one night, making his heart leap. Could it be the signal? Yes, there it came again and again! Surely it must be Marata, for the cry swelled and waned, long drawn and sad as the cry of the lost. Robson hid his rifle in a bush, then drew it out again.

"I must have my rifle in case I should be seen by one of the other pickets," he said. He slipped it across his shoulder and stole with stealthy step out into the shadows.

"Marata!" a voice answered him from the darkness.

And the impatient lover swung himself down the cliff with the aid of the overhanging bushes and stunted trees.

"Marata!" he called again eagerly.

And again a voice answered close at hand and he saw a dim figure outlined in the obscure shadows of the canyon, where the starlight only penetrated fitfully. It was not Marata, for the dim light showed him an uplifted arm and the pale glitter of a steel blade descending and to feel the sharp pain of the knife in his shoulder, stumbled and fell, sliding helplessly down the slope to the bottom of the canyon.

It was the fall that saved him, for otherwise his assailant would have struck him full in the chest with the cruel knife would have sent him out into the unknown. As it was, he had time to recover himself, stagger to his feet and draw his own knife before Wild Horse could swing himself down the wall of rock to renew the attack.

Robson's years of frontier service had made him as skillful with the knife as the Indian himself, and he was no less lithe and strong in body and courageous in heart, but as they bent, swayed and struggled, venting all manner of the wound in Robson's shoulder began to tell and the loss of blood to weaken him.

A strange feeling of languor took possession of him, the glitter of the stars seemed farther away, and then they faded before his eyes as he stumbled and slipped over the rough stones.

Blindly he staggered. His nerveless hand could hardly hold the knife. It was growing darker, darker. Suddenly there came a flash and roar from the wall of the canyon. Wild Horse screamed and hurled his arms aloft and fell upon the stones. But Robson did not heed nor see. The whole earth reeled before him, and he sank into unconsciousness. When he awoke, a fire lit up the canyon, a group of energetic soldiers stood about him, and his hands were pillowed upon Marata's breast.

"Wild Horse came first," she whispered when he could listen. "I saw him slip away and steal down for me, and I followed as fast as I could, for I had my own knife, but I could not keep up with him. I heard the struggle and came down into the canyon. Upon the wall my foot struck the rifle lying among the stones, and it was with that I shot him. The Great Spirit put it in my way."

Robson did not answer in words. He was smiling peacefully, and his glad eyes answered for him.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

A Long Felt Want.

Who does not know the bother that may be caused by a demand for so simple a thing as a piece of toast? If cook is trying to heat her oven, she must give up the attempt for awhile, since toast must be made over the gas, and this necessitates the removal of the stove lid, and the consequent cooling of the fire. Much the same condition exists for the heating of the boiler or for the quickening of the fire itself. Therefore the latest invention for help in this matter will soon be hanging in every kitchen. It consists of a circle of asbestos, just about the size of an ordinary stove lid. It is covered with a fine wire netting and supplied with a handle of coiled wire. This is fitted over the fire without disturbing its condition. It does not check the draft in any way, and the bread on it turns a beautiful golden brown without danger of a scorch, while the oven and the boiler are busy about their own duties.

Latest in Lumbering.

The lumberman has unquestionably returned to the haunts of fashion, although it is now called a valance, a term that formerly was applied to gathered lower draperies and not to straight upper curtains. A charming example seen in a recently furnished studio has a curtain of valance of sage green velours, with a center design in gold applique. A long piece of sage green and dull gold silk brocade is used for the side drapery and is carried up under the valance at each side, with the middle portion drawn in a festoon over the valours in such a way that the applique part is fully shown. The lower side edges of the valours also are seen. This looped part of the curtain and the lower edge of the valance are finished with gold tassel fringe. The valance is fastened to the brass pole by brass rings.

Keeps the Rug Straight.

Rugs on the floors of a house not only aid in the decoration of the rooms, but are a necessity to protect the carpets from wear, and yet when they begin to curl up at the corners and people catch their toes in them they become a veritable nuisance. It is to prevent this curling up of the corners that the rug straightener shown here has been designed. The rug being shown wrong side up to expose the device to view. The invention, which has been patented by George T. Weeks of Edon, O., consists of a series of flat strips of metal or wood, which are inserted in pockets arranged near the corners and sides of the rug. The pockets are shaped to receive the ends of the strips and may be sewed to the rug or fastened by means of wire staples. To insert the strips they are bent slightly to bring the ends nearer together, and the whole device is thin enough to be hardly noticeable when the rug is on the floor. The idea may also be applied to the large rugs covering a whole floor, a pair of the strips being placed in each corner at right angles to each other.

Chairs.

Wicker and rush chairs may be given a new and stylish appearance by staining. This cannot be done, however, if the pieces have been painted. Forest green, old gray, scarlet and dull blue, as well as black, are the colors most used and add quite a touch of individuality to an ordinary piece of furniture. Easy chairs may have upholstered seats and cushion backs covered with velours, cretonne or a bit of the many beautiful designs in cretonne and chintz. For a green chair a green chintz with yellow roses makes a charming combination, or spotted green velours can be used. The dull gray chairs may be upholstered with rich and costly floral cretonnes. The red and black chairs acquire a more subdued design, and the blue chairs are pretty with cushions made of green and blue cretonne.

Burned Wood Decoration.

Pro, or burned wood, decoration is applied to match receptacles in these days of general decoration. On one fancifully designed match receptacle, with panel attachment, seen recently the following quotation from "Romeo and Juliet" is etched on the panel: "She doth make the torches to burn." A profile view of an Italian girl occupies the center of the panel.

A torch is shown burning on another section, and the light from it flames in sweeping lines over the wooden surface. The head and torch are touched with red, which appears in the lips and cheeks of the girl and the flame of the torch. The match receptacle is a small open box of wood fastened at the bottom of the panel.

For a Husky Voice.

To make a husky voice strong and clear bathe the throat, chest and back morning and evening to the waist line with cold water. Follow by a brisk rubbing with a rough towel. Use the voice properly. Souds should be expelled by the abdominal muscles.

The Saving Sense of Humor.

Some of the world's greatest humorists unite with that brightly gift a deep tenderness and broad sympathy. Their lips smile at a spectacle of the absurd at the same instant that their eyes overflow in recognizing the pathetic that is its so frequent accompaniment. It is this quick perception of a situation as a whole, this power to see all its aspects at once, that gives us just judgments tempered by mercy, severity lined with leniency, that acts as a saving grace to culprits.

The world would be better and happier if every one in it who is invested with authority over his fellows had this peculiar sympathy with wit, which makes it impossible for one to be a bigot and a tyrant. Humor and cruelty do not go together, although there is a kind of counterfeit humor, sometimes mistaken for the real thing, which is essentially oppressive, because it finds enjoyment in looking upon that which is at the same time grotesque and horrible. But this is far removed from the gentle humor which mellows their judgments and humanizes actions.—Florence Hull Winterburn in Woman's Home Companion.

WM. E. BOYER,
Mercantile Appraiser
Danville, Pa., April 24th, 1902.

John Phillips Sousa, the celebrated bandmaster, whose visits to Danville are much enjoyed, and who has been the only musician to make money in traveling and rendering programs that please the masses rather than the few cultivated musicians, has written a most interesting article in the New York Daily News, in which he tells how to succeed in the management of men. Sousa says: "You can not be merely a director of a body of men if you wish to manage them. Your control over them must be intellectual. Personal magnetism and technical knowledge are the main qualities. If I have personal magnetism, it consists, for one thing, in making every member of my band feel that he and I alone are responsible for our concert. I often say to a nervous newcomer: 'Now remember, you and I are giving this concert. I won't fail if you won't.' That simple device, with real feeling back of it, helps the man and the man helps me. But it is undoubtedly often put down to personal magnetism in the ordinary sense of the word. Also, I am never personal in any satirical remark I may make. Much depends upon that.

"You can not control men by making fun of them individually. You can control them by laughing at them all, blaming them all, satirizing them all, and they will all laugh together and try to do better. But if you single out one man for ridicule he will resent it, and the rest will fear you.

"You can not be merely a director of any body of men if you wish to manage them. Your control over them must be more intellectual than mere direction. You must appeal to their intelligence, and the way to do that is to suggest to that intelligence. By this method you will have under you not mere obeying orders, which is an example of a low form of control indeed, but you have men in whom you have induced helpful mental activity, which can only result in intelligent and successful effort. And they are the first to recognize this, and your control over them increases with this recognition. A third possible method of control is by fear. This is the worst way in the world, but there are certain natures from whom it seems to win the best results. I know only two classes of men I can not control—the excessively stupid and the excessively vain."

Her Fifteenth Birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Weaver, Pine street, entertained between the hours of 7 and 10, Saturday evening in honor of the fifteenth birthday anniversary of their daughter, Sara. The evening was very merrily whiled away with dancing and games of various kinds. During the evening refreshments were served. The following were present: Misses Julia Voris, Margaret Sieder, Catharine Kemmer, Clara Detweiler, Eloise Cressman, Elsie Moore, Dora Jenkins, May Davis, Lillian Foster, Mildred Zehnder, Rena and Elsie Gulick, Florence Price, Elsie Lloyd, Eleanor Corman, Lorine Phillips Ruth Frick, Elizabeth Vestine, Ivy Margret Florence Smith, Bertha Cloud, Margaret Evans, Edith Blue, Masters Lewis Williams, Robert Ammerman, and Harry Latimer.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown Surprised.

On Saturday evening a genuine surprise was sprung on Mr. and Mrs. John G. Brown at their cozy home No. 118 West Market street, it being the fifth anniversary of their marriage. The arrangements were kept a profound secret, the party meeting at the residence of J. O. Peifer at 8:30 o'clock and proceeding to the Brown home, bearing with them an elegant Morris chair in addition to the usual assortment of articles which go with a wedding, such as buckets, brooms, wash boards, clothes pins, bowls, brushes and the like. A most delightful evening was spent, the guests seeming to outvie each other in good will and merry making. Refreshments were served and many well wishes were showered on the happy host and hostess.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Woolley, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Peifer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Watson, Mr. and Mrs. Warren W. Welliver, Mrs. John R. Sharpless, Mrs. Charles P. Hancock, Benjamin Cook, Danville, Helen Magill, Emeline Gearhart, Anna Davis, Cordelia Woolley, Bertha Gaskins and Dr. J. E. Gearhart.

PHILADELPHIA & READING'S NEW DEPARTURE.

Hourly Trains Between Philadelphia and New York.

To improve its passenger service this Spring, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway is making many additions to its schedule.

Beginning with the new time-table effective about May 15th, the company proposes to inaugurate hourly service of fast express trains between Reading Terminal, Philadelphia and New York and will run entirely independent of the Royal Blue Line service, and the before will obviate all change of cars, waiting for connections, etc., at Wayne Junction.

These trains will leave the Terminal stations, both in Philadelphia and New York, week-days, at 7:00, 8:00, 9:00, 10:00, 11:00 A. M., 12:00 noon, 1:00, 2:00, 3:00, 4:00, 5:00, 6:00 and 7:00 P. M.

The equipments of these trains will be thoroughly up to date, solid vestibule coaches and Pullman Parlor cars, provided with buffet service when needed, and while the running time has not been definitely determined, they will undoubtedly keep up the Philadelphia & Reading standard of as fast speed as is compatible with safety and comfort.

It is expected that this new service will be well patronized. Persons will not need to consult time-tables, being assured of catching a fast train each hour of the business day.

Birthday Surprise.

Mrs. Emma Camp was tendered a surprise party Saturday evening at her home, East Market street, in honor of her birthday. The following were present: Rev. and Mrs. L. D. Ulrich, Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Dieffenbacher, Mr. and Mrs. John Lormer, Mr. and Mrs. William Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. George Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. Bigler Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Aron, Messrs. A. B. Rowe, William Hartman, Jane Camp, Mrs. Kiser, Misses Aletha Heller, Mand Seidel, Ella Camp, Marion Camp, Marie Roney, Ethel Foust, Mabel Foust, Ruth Shull, Ethel Haring, Thelma Dieffenbacher, Julia Arms, Ella Snyder and Ruth Boyer.

A delicious supper was served. Mrs. Camp received as presents a handsome rocking chair and a very beautiful picture.

CONVINCING PROOF.

The Average Danville Citizen Must Accept the Following Proof.

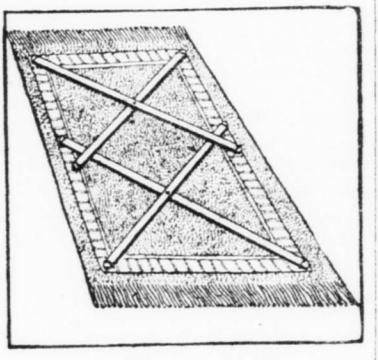

The great Sir Isaac Newton, one of the most profound reasoners the world ever produced, once cut a large hole in a board fence to allow a favorite cat access to two gardens, and cut a smaller hole to allow her kitten to follow her. The weak-minded maid in Sir Isaac's action was due to want of thought. Any reader who mentally debates the proof offered here about Doan's Kidney Pills and arrives at any other conclusion than that which is set forth in this statement, is as short reasoning as the philosopher when he turned croaker.

Mr. W. C. Richard, Grocer, living on Corlies and Third streets, Bloomsburg, says: "I was taken suddenly with stitches in my back which were so distressing that I almost fell to the ground. I was confined to my bed. Doan's Kidney Pills came to my attention and I took a course of the treatment. It cured me."

Twelfth Regiment to be Disbanded.

Word from Harrisburg is to the effect that the Twelfth regiment will be disbanded in the very near future, and its companies used in filling up the short regiment in this section of the state. For a long time past it has been known that several regiments of the National Guard were to be disbanded, but just which regiments would be selected as the ones to go, was a question that the spring inspection should determine.

Colonel Clement of the Twelfth, is not inclined to believe that his regiment is to go.

It is rumored that either the Fifth or Fourteenth regiment will also be disbanded.

The reason given for the disbanding of the Fourteenth is on account of the lack of armory room. In the event of this regiment being disbanded its companies will be used to make the regiments in the Second brigade twelve companies regiments. This would also be done with the companies of the Fifth regiment, if it were mustered out. The Fifth regiment is in disfavor owing to misconduct of the Clearfield company on inspection.—Williamsport Sun.

For a month past the annual exodus of tramps to this section from the Southland has been going on and along the country roads one may see the vagrants wending their way in squads. Whether or not they will thrive here during the summer depends largely on the way they are received in the cities and towns and by the farmers of the agricultural localities. As a class they are not worth the charitable reflections that have been lavished upon them. The quicker they are treated as criminals the better it will be for the decent and respectable citizens who believe in earning their bread by the sweat of their brows. In winter there is some excuse for a charitable feeling entering into a consideration of the "problem," for then it is hard to refuse the needful to hungry and shivering men; but in the summer time when harvests are to be reaped; when the sun of prosperity shines for all, there ought to be but one treatment for tramps—work.

All small timber under eight inches in diameter reserved. For further information, apply to

E. C. PERRINE,
18 E. Lexington St.,
Baltimore, Md.
or to JOHN T. MITCHELL, Agent,
Oakland, Garrett County, Maryland.

A Doctor's Bad Plight.

"Two years ago, as a result of a serious cold, I lost my voice. I tried Dr. M. L. Scarborough, or Hebron, Ohio "then began an obstinate cough. Every remedy known to me as a practicing physician for 25 years, failed, and I daily grew worse. Being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, I found quick relief, and for the last ten days have felt better than for two years." Positively guaranteed for Throat and Lung troubles by Fawcett & Co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

Now that the base ball season has opened it is reasonable to infer that spring has come.
