"Let me tell the whole story," said Donald. "You can't imagine what a relief it will be to me. The first knowledge that I had of any trouble here was in the spring, when Tim Healy wrote to me that Carl Archer hated my father and was trying to injure him. "He walks up and down in Mr. Har-

rington's room when there's no one else there,' wrote Tim, 'and he talks to himself. I can see him through the glass partition, but he can't see me, be cause there's a reflection from that side. I've seen him swear that he'll do your father up. I don't know how he thinks he's going to manage it, but that's what he says.

"I didn't know what to make of it, and I wrote back to Healy to keep his hard thinking in two matters-the friends to search for him. Tim couldn't prove anything. He thought the house that noon. That's all, uncle; That day in the restaurant while the that if it were told he'd merely make an enemy of Mr. Archer and do no good to anybody.

"After awhile Tim wrote me that Mr. Bunn knew of Cari's feeling, but ald's seeming prediction of Gillespie's that Mr. Bunn was in so much trouble and so tangled up by owing money to Carl and you and my father that he did not dare to take any action. Carl was making promises to him and holding him in check. "Finally Tim told me that you had

That was Tim's greatest Mr. Bunn had already stolen mistake. it, by changing the packages, and it was hidden in the letter file, but Tim did not succeed in catching that fact. He told me that, considering how Carl felt toward my father, there might be serious trouble if that money should be while my father was so burdened with this Harbrook Land company. I thought that that was a mere scare. I never dreamed that Carl could really do such a thing. However, I made up my mind to come home and

"But when I got here I didn't know what to do. You will remember that I asked you whether you were surrounded by trustworthy people, and what you said to me that night about Mr. Bunn and Carl simply drove me to despair. I couldn't make accusations against them upon the evidence of what Healy had seen them say. He begged me not to do so. He told me that the two men would stand together against him and that it would be his ruin; you'd never have any confidence in him again.

"Well," he continued, with a sob, "I went to you, uncle, and said that I was going to make a fool of myself, and it's certain that I have kept my word. I ought to have told my father, and I tried to do it, but as soon as I hinted that there was anything wrong with Carl I saw that he was as strongly prejudiced as you were. PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

A serious attempt is being made to popularize Shakespeare in Japan. Mrs. Annie Yeamans is soon to celebrate her fifty-sixth anniversary on the stage.

Ada Rehan has returned to New York. Haddon Chambers is writing a play for her. Marcella Sembrich is being enthusiastically received in Chicago, where she is giving concerts. "The Judgment of King Solomon" is being played in New York. It is a play by Dore Davidson. John Hare has made known his intention to retire from the stage in 1904. when he will be sixty years old. "Among Those Present," Glen Mac-Donough's new society play, is making
