LEFT CHILDREN TO FREEZE

Two little tots, aged two and four respectively, children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Getter, of Shamokin, were on Tuesday afternoon rescued from freezing in their home on Second street, where their parents had locked them in. The Getters live in the basement of David Fisher's house. The cries of the neglected children had attracted quite a crowd, who were unable to enter the room and relieve them as the doors and windows were locked. The sight aroused the pity of School Director Peter Barr, who passed by, and he went to the office of Attorney Under to see if the poor children could not be notified to break in and attend to the suffering children.

The children, who had been cared for at the poor house, were returned to their parents two months ago at the latter's request. Attorney Under notified the poor directors' office, but none of the directors were in, and he and Mr. Barr decided to go to the relief of the children, and if necessary, to break in.

Fisher had a key to the basement, however, and when the school directors arrived, they unlocked the door and released the children, who were half frozen. A kind neighbor, Mrs. Snyder, took the children in, thawed them out and fed them until taken to the poor house.

After Attorney Under had gone back to his office, the parents who said they had been down town, came there and wanted the children. Mr. Under and the neighbors were unwilling to give them up to be neglected by their cruel parents.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES. There has just closed the first national conference of colored Associations at Atlanta, Georgia, at which 150 delegates were present from the college and city Associations. Two of the secretaries of the international Committee who are promoting Bible Study conducted sessions at the conference in the interests of this phase of the work in the city and student Associations. They report unusual interest and intelligence regarding religious work among colored young men. Modern methods of organization and work were intelligently and enthusiastically considered.

The Atlanta Association has recently made the colored Association a department of its work. Leading men at various points in the South are assisting in the movement. There are now 67 colored school and college Associations, and 31 colored city Associations in the United States. The membership is nearly 7,000 and is growing rapidly. In the building recently given by Mr. George Foster Peabody to the colored branch in Brooklyn, educational classes are taught by the best educated colored men in Brooklyn.

Mr. Peabody made the first contribution to the $50,000 endowment for colored work, given to the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. This committee has for thirty years aimed to develop this department, and has two educated colored secretaries who are directing the enterprise.

The colored department in New York City has recently bought a $28,000 building, and now has a membership of 280. Twenty men, most of them Pullman porters, are rooming in its dormitories. It contemplates erecting a $75,000 building in the future.

Hon. P. J. White Dead. SCRANTON, Pa., Dec. 16.—Patrick J. White, who represented the Fourth Lackawanna district in the last Legislature, died suddenly in a Delaware and Hudson passenger train today while on his way from his home in Archbald to this city. Heart failure, thought to have been brought on by a brisk run to the station in order to catch the train, caused Mr. White's death. Mr. White was 55 years old. He was born in Ireland and was formerly principal of the Archbald High school.

Many Made Homeless. PITTSBURGH, Dec. 16.—Between seventy-five and one hundred people were rendered homeless today and driven out into the cold, with nothing but their night clothes, by a fire which destroyed the planing mill and lumber yard of the Bennett Lumber and Manufacturing Company at Millvale, Pa., and partially destroyed a dozen houses adjoining the burned mill property.

The fire started in the engine room of the planing mill about 11 o'clock, and for a time threatened the entire town. Aid was requested from Ackleghty but before the engines reached Millvale, the fire was under control.

Shortage in Bank Cashiers' Accounts. NEW HAVEN, Conn., Dec. 16.—An additional shortage of $1,000, making the total thus far known $17,000, has been discovered in the accounts of Van C. Bushnell, the cashier of the Yale National Bank, which committed suicide yesterday. General E. S. Greedy, president of the bank, said it would be impossible to state definitely until tomorrow whether there is still greater shortage, but he declared he felt confident that the full extent of the delinquency has already been learned.

Not Under Quarantine.

It was reported about town Tuesday that the members of the Bennett & Moulton theatrical company who were not permitted to leave their car in this city upon returning to Milton Monday evening were quickly placed under quarantine. This is denied by Milton.

The smallpox suspect is still under quarantine, but the certificate given by the other members of the company by Dr. Brothers of the State Board of Health declaring that in view of precautions taken they are in no danger of scattering the germs of the disease is accepted without question in Milton and the people are permitted to go and to come at pleasure.

Monday night and Tuesday the show people were domiciled at West Milton. Pay day is about due and as soon as they receive their money it is believed that the people will temporarily disband and return to their respective homes.

It is denied in Milton that the smallpox suspect before being placed under quarantine succeeded in getting into any hotels or places of business. He crossed the bridge but soon after was taken into custody but soon after was taken into custody. It is believed that the case is one of smallpox. The unfortunate actor is quarantined in a passenger coach on the siding at Dougal, a place about three-fourths of a mile below the town.

The people of Milton profess not in the least to be alarmed over the matter. The scare it seems, is confined to the several towns of the coal region, especially Girardville, where the company played Saturday night. Many inquiries reach Milton daily from those places, asking for the name of the smallpox suspect, which are made by business people anxious to know whether the man was about their place during his stay in town.

A Costly Mistake. Blunders are sometimes very expensive. Occasionally life itself is the price of a mistake, but you'll never be wrong if you take Dr. King's New Life Pills for Dyspepsia, Dizziness, Headache, Liver or Bowel troubles. They are gentle yet thorough. 25c at Parke's & Co's Drug Store.

Measuring the Roads. The supervisors of Gearhart township, Northumberland county, are just now engaged in measuring their highways in order to comply with the Sprung Good Roads law by turning in the road mileage of the township. Supervisor Richard of the lower end employs the method adopted in this county, namely, recording the revolutions of a wheel whose circumference has been measured. Supervisor Gearhart of the upper end is much aided by the town logs which thank the road.

TO CURE A COULD IN ONE DAY. Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. Groves' signature is on each box. 25c.

STORY OF CAL-CURA. Discovered by Dr. David Kennedy—Only Kidney Remedy Sold Under Guarantee. Dr. David Kennedy was born in New York City, but at an early age his family moved to Rochester, N.Y. He was graduated in 1869 from the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons. He at once volunteered as a surgeon and was assigned to the United States Army General Hospital in West Philadelphia, and soon became President of the Examining Board and Consulting Surgeon. After the war, Dr. Kennedy settled in Hoboken, City of Kingston, N.Y., where for a number of years he enjoyed a large practice as an operative surgeon. He was one of the Presidential Electors of New York State, Mayor of Kingston for four years, and held many other professional, business and political offices.

The latest achievement of his life was the discovery of Cal-cura Solvent, a positive cure for all diseases of the kidneys and bladder. In speaking of the remarkable remedy, he said: "Cal-cura Solvent is the crowning achievement of my life. It will not disappoint." Your druggist will return your money if Cal-cura fails to cure, and the Cal-cura Company, of Rondout, N.Y., will pay the druggist. Cal-cura solvent cures 98% of all cases of Kidney, Bladder, Liver, and other ailments. $1.00 a bottle. Only one size.

A WRONG DIAGNOSIS

Anthony Forbes found himself at twenty-three years of age, in possession of an income of $10,000 a year, quite enough to gratify all his wishes, there was nothing for him to accomplish. When therefore a medical specialist told him that a certain lump he had discovered on his person was not a vital part to be removed, was of a malignant nature and would kill him within a period of from a few months to a few years, the only horror attending the announcement was the suffering involved. However, since there was as yet no pain, the young man determined to turn everything he had into cash and get all the enjoyment out of life in it. This would serve a double purpose of giving him pleasure and diverting his mind.

Forbes believed that the greatest enjoyment is to be derived from association with the opposite sex. He had no mind to come himself to any one woman he chose. The first was Agnes Tweed, one of those girls who in Paris go by the name of grisette; the second was Mildred St. Clair, a society belle; the third, Margaret Walton, the daughter of a clergyman whose income he received was $10,000 a year.

Forbes spent an average of $20,000 a month for eight months, then, finding that his funds were growing less, he consulted his physician, who told him that he had been mistaken in his judgment of the lump, and was being absorbed. The young man found himself with life before him and a fortune reduced from $20,000 to $2,000, out of which an income could be derived for bare support. He resolved to announce to Agnes that he was going to marry her, and then to turn to the other women.

"Margaret," he said, "eight months ago I was told by my physician that I must die within a short period. I turned my fortune into cash and have been spending it freely ever since, and now I am left with a few hundred dollars. Now the doctor tells me that he was mistaken in the character of my disease and I have nothing to fear. Some of your friends are just now just enough for a life-time. Will you share it with me as my wife?" Margaret thought for some time before replying.

"I could not think of passing my life," she said, "with a man who has no ambition, no principles, no sympathy for a world in which so much is needed. But you on your part, do you announce to me that you are going to marry me, and then to turn to the other women?"

Margaret thought for some time before replying. "I could not think of passing my life," she said, "with a man who has no ambition, no principles, no sympathy for a world in which so much is needed. But you on your part, do you announce to me that you are going to marry me, and then to turn to the other women?"

With bowed head Forbes left her, perhaps more depressed than when his doctor had told him to marry soon. He wandered about aimlessly for a few days, then, thinking of nothing, he discovered a large quantity of money hidden in a box under his bed. It was $10,000, the same amount which he had lost. He was overjoyed and immediately announced to his wife that he had found the money.

"Mildred," he added, "had I sought you when I was well and possessed a fortune, I would have asked for your hand. It will be as if I had not thought of you. As it is I cannot think of proposing that you should share my meager income."

"Centimes," replied the girl, "that had you asked me before the sunning of your fortune I would have accepted you, though I could not have been offered me. As it is I must go to my work. As for me, I will not share it with you. As for me, I will not share it with you."

"Tong," she said, after he had announced that the doctor had erred, that his life was before him and that he still had money in his pocket, "you are a good fellow. You have treated me 'right' and I have come a lot of money on me, and now you propose to get rid of the rest of your fortune in the same way. I'm going to surprise you by refusing to take any more of it. For you there is still a chance for me. My advice to you is, settle down to lead a steady life, and let the rest of us take care of ourselves." It will be some time before Mr. Forbes and his wife are able to get along. Forbes went away protesting that she was the only friend left him and that she should continue so. When the next day he went to see her again he found that she had moved without leaving any address.

Five years passed. One day Anthony Forbes called upon his physician and said to him: "I have a desire to thank you for the able manner in which you handled my case when it was supposed I had a malignant tumor. The growth, whatever it was, has disappeared. It was not that from which I suffered, but of general worthlessness. Soon after you pronounced me sound I went to work and have succeeded in building up a good business. I have recently married Miss Margaret Walton, who was your principal assistant in handling my disease. Good morning, doctor."

Forbes handed the physician an envelope containing a substantial check for additional fee.

Notices have been received by the real delivery mail carriers informing them of the holding of a State convention of rural carriers in Gettysburg today for the purpose of organizing a State organization, which will in turn become affiliated with the national association. The notices have been sent out by the heads of various county organizations and arrangements have been made whereby carriers from counties not having organizations can be admitted to the State convention. In some sections of the State efforts are being made to organize mutual health insurance companies, so as to protect themselves from illness, and it is probable that this place of the work will be discussed at the 15th district meeting.

ABLE TO LEAVE HIS ROOM. William J. Ames has so far recovered as to be able to come down stairs at the Montour House. He spent several hours yesterday in the reading room. He was looking well and was in good spirits, chatting pleasantly with his friends who had assembled around him.

ODD ROCK FORMATIONS.

Two queer crabs of nature on the Island of St. Helena. The two crabs of nature on the Island of St. Helena, or rather four, for one of them is a group of three figures known to the world over as the "Devil's Nose" and "Lot and His Daughters." Any one who is able to study the island as it is and not run wild over the "Devil's Nose" legends which have clustered about that "sea-bound rock" since the days when the "Little Corporal" was housed there in his living grave will find much that will repay for investigation, time and study.

The most prominent of the natural formations are the oddities above alluded to. The first of these initiative forms is a rocky promontory which has been known by names which signify Old Nick's nasal protrusion. In May 22, 1802, when the Castles and his men sighted the island just in time to see the devil disappear beneath the waves in the best harbor, leaving his nose as a reminder of what might happen should the venturous Spaniards seek to make good the old man's satanic majesty's favorite haunts.

"Lot and His Daughters" are three conical rocks which can only be explained by representing a man and two women in a strong play of the imagination. According to the views of Forbes, however, the lot means a group of statues of colossal size, probably the work of some aboriginals of the island. Their gigantic size, however, would seem to preclude this idea. When or by whom they were dubbed "Lot and His Daughters" no authority has yet tried to say.

Ending Her Stories. A very small girl of very large literary ambitions found it easy enough to begin her stories and work up the plots to the right consistency for thrill producing, but then for the life of her she could not "get them stopped." One day, however, the lot means a group of statues of colossal size, probably the work of some aboriginals of the island. Their gigantic size, however, would seem to preclude this idea. When or by whom they were dubbed "Lot and His Daughters" no authority has yet tried to say.

Horse as a Murderer. A remarkable story comes from Melton, England. A man noticed a horse circling continually round a lamb, grazing in a field. The farmer thereupon organized to fight the horse, but through a hedge into a flooded ditch beyond an exact spot where another lamb was drowned. The horse was diverted from its murderous design with great difficulty.

Death of Franklin Nevins. Franklin, the eight-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Nevins, Montour Row, died yesterday morning. The cause of death was acute Bright's disease. The deceased was the eldest of five children. The funeral will take place Friday at 2 p. m. Interment in Odd Fellows' cemetery.

The police force of Mr. Carmel have been notified by the chief Burgess of that town to arrest all farmers pending their protests against paying the regular taxes for the farmers there. The farmers there have organized to fight the borough and defy the borough officials to arrest them. The borough has decided that a test case is necessary to see what can be done.

Revisiting Danville. J. Homer Stacks formerly druggist for Dr. Paules, arrived in this city yesterday for a short visit. Mr. Stacks, who left this place several months ago, is at present conducting a store of his own at York.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys. Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood. All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys are your blood purifiers. They filter out the waste or impurities in the blood. If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

It is used to be considered that only urinary troubles were connected with the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble. If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, is wonderful proof of the truth of these things.

AN EPISODE OF OLD NEW YORK

At that time there were few houses in the city north of Wall street, and we lived in the country on the upper end of Manhattan Island. The Curtises lived near and as Dorothy Curtis was then barely twenty and I but two years older we naturally saw much of each other. There was no man in her family to take her into town when she wished to go there to make purchases, so I either took her down on the river in my boat or drove in my own buggy. I was that which we liked most, rode on horse-back. It was on those jaunts that I became infatuated with the tones of her voice, the curve of her neck, the dimples on her cheek, which was the cause of my going so long as I followed her always, and not even her dog, which usually accompanied ahead of us, was more easily subdued at sight of her raised whip than I at a single flash of her eyes or a scornful curl of her lip.

A man is never so stupid as when in love, and I gave myself much vexation because of this same stupidity. There was one occasion when I failed to see even what was plain as the three corners of my hat or the line of my nose. On one of our visits to the city Dorothy, instead of going to a woman's dressmaker, went to a tailoring shop and bought a coat, waistcoat, breeches, hose and shoes for a man, or rather, for a boy, because she desired a suit so similar in size that a man's suit would not suffer. There was nothing surprising in this, since who lived in the country, especially those of us dwelling near Hudson's river as far down as the village of Greenwich, were dressed and dressed was intended, this suit, for herself or some of her girl friends.

It was the next afternoon that I rode up to the Curtises' and, latching my horse at the gate, went up into the house. I was sitting in the parlor when Dorothy came in and I espied her through a window and under a tree with a man. And as I looked what should he do but fall Dorothy in his arms, and in this fashion they walked together toward the house. I rushed into the hall, I went out through a rear door and met them face to face.

"Your presence, sir," I said, "is offensive to me. I beg that you leave this place at once." "Mr. Huntington," cried Dorothy, "invented at my assumption. 'Who gave you the right to order my guests away, and in my very presence?'" "I beg your pardon, Mistress Curtis, I am much pained to see you in such a position as you were when I came up. There is some excuse for me in that, I suppose."

What did the cowardly fellow beside her do but run like a deer into the house. I had had down my cap, which in this contemptible possession I thrust back into my waistcoat, and turning my back on Dorothy, snatched my fingers, saying: "The girl who can receive the caresses of such a coward is of no consequence to me whatever." Then suddenly it occurred to me that I was not a word of love had passed between Dorothy and myself, so I bowed humbly and asked forgiveness for having made so much ado about what did not concern me. It seemed to me from the expression of her face that anger was struggling with a desire to laugh at me. This roused my choler all the more, and I was about to fly into new freaks of temper when she looked at me somewhat less angrily out of her soft eyes and said: "Edward."

"Dorothy," I replied, mournfully, "why did you not stab me with steel instead of with this bag of dough?" "I have not stabbed you at all, Ned. Come, let us go back there among the trees and have a bout." "What! Will you have all your lovers without the same?" "Tut, tut, Mr. Huntington! I'm not accustomed to having my conduct thus criticised. Please measure your words more carefully."

She turned and went to the very spot where I had seen her take her arms without looking back to see if I followed. I did follow, but to a halting stop, for putting my foot forward lungingly desiring to make peace, no sooner was it planted than the other legged. I mindful of the detestable scene, I at last was stood under the tree. I folded my arms and turned my back, casting glance up at the sky, which I saw no more than the girl behind me.

"You need not flatter yourself, sir," she said, "that there can ever be aught between us. I could respect a pirate, but a fool never. You remember yesterday in town I bought a man's suit of clothes. It was for my cousin, Mistress Lucy Livingston, who came this morning from Harlem and who will be with us at the ball."

With this I turned around as a man struck by a bullet in battle and faced her. "I curse my addle-pate!" "I am glad that you have never before met Mistress Livingston, else I would not have discovered that addle-patedness which you curse."

In a trice I was at her feet imploring her to forgive the blunder of my not recognizing a bit of girl whose nine-line steps were only more plain since she wore no petticoats. And then she laughed and said, "Ned, since it was your love that made you a choler, and your choler made you a fool, I forgive you."
