Believing that he was serving the township's interest the Supervisor ordered the pole cut down. The order was carried out by a resident of the township in his employ and the objectionable pole was soon out of the way. The linemen quickly proceeded to replace the pole but this time to get ahead of the Supervisor they strung volved in causing destruction such as would follow in cutting down a pole to which wires were attached. To make it still more difficult for the Supervisor one of the linemen climb-

It was at this point that the fun really began. The Supervisor declarclimbed to the top to come down. The lineman, however, kept his perch. while others of the crew kept up a vigorous protest against further inout his threat and ordered a workman

The man took his axe in hand, but crew threw themselves against the Nothing daunted, however, the work-The crew found themselves in an unpleasant position and it did not take them long to vacate their post. Again the Supervisor called to the if he remained in his perch he would do so at his peril. He then gave the word and again the axe began its work. When the pole was half chopped off the Supervisor again called to he lineman and told him that he intended to cut down the pole. The lineman, however, was as plucky as the Supervisor and he held on to his perch. A few more strokes and the pole was severed. It swung to one side, but was prevented from falling to the ground by the wires, a fact no doubt foreseen by the lineman, which encouraged him to remain on
