Organ Grinders Arrested

Two strenuous Italians who boasted of a street piano with a drum and bell attachment came to grief Saturday night and were obliged to yield up some of their hard earned coin in payment of fine besides undergoing imprisonment in the lock-up. The two men dragging their noisy machine after them appeared in town Friday afternoon. They did a good business until late in the evening when they dropped out of sight until Saturday morning. Where they slept during the night no one knew, with the exception of George Reifsnyder.

On visiting his shop at an early hour Saturday George found the two musicians snugly tucked away on some choice lumber in the lower story of his carpenter shop. Their intrusion might have been half pardonable if they had not forced the door open to gain admittance. George drove the fellows out and told them if they came back they would get into trouble.

The sons of Italy put in a full day Saturday and before retiring about midnight Mr. Reifsnyder went around to his carpenter shop to see whether the Italians had ventured to repeat their trick. To his surprise he found them back in the old roost. He ordered them to leave forthwith, but they demanded to know what right he had barn of Jacob Kramer. C. W. Eckman to interfere with them and told him to get out. Mr. Reifsnyder reported the matter to the police, who went after the Italer. Charge larceny. Defendant was lians. In due time a small procession arraigned and pleaded guilty. Court might have been seen moving down town consisting of the two officers, the two dagos and the street piano. The two men were put in the lock-up and the instrument was run under a tree near by.

Yesterday morning the men wanted to settle. They acknowledged themselves guilty and were willing to pay a fine. Time was precious to them and they could not tolerate the thought of spending Sunday in the lock-up. Their next engagement was in Bloomsburg to move on their way.

They were permitted to meet the demands of Justice in their own way. They deposited the money required to pay their fine and while the day was still young they wended their way over the hills toward Bloomsburg.
