BIRD JOURNEYS.

Small Animals Often Travel on the Backs of Large Ones. It has often been asked how small and weak birds manage to fly such enormous distances when migrating. As a rule, however, small birds that have come very far across the sea have not flown, but have been blown over during violent gales, and many of them arrive on land in a half dead condition.

In fair weather small birds make siderable tracts of ocean, but the reason is that they are carried on the backs of the larger ones. When passing an autumn in Crete a writer asserts that he distinctly heard the twittering of small birds when flocks of sand cranes were passing overhead on other occasion, when firing a gun, he cranes. A native prie : assured him dug out with pick and shovel, loaded on with them, while it has been found er at times of migration.

Another cause is that small birds do not make their journeys in one flight. They generally rest during the day, to their destination by easy stages.

"There is something repulsive in the climate of St. Petersburg in the early spring and autumn," says a writer, "when the thermometer often falls 30 when the winds blow raw and cold from every quarter of the compass and the quick moving droskies shower the abominations of the roads impartially upon noble and peasant. It is no consolation to the visitor to know that the Neva is seaied by ice early in November or late in October. Long indeed before the frost king has stalked down to the latitude of St. Petersburg the lordly river is completely blocked. Great ice sheets from stormy Ladoga and by one who was in consultation float down the current. THE DEVIL'S CODE.

Stockholm's public library contains a wonderful work which is called "The Devil's Code" and which, in addition to its extraordinary name, is said to be the biggest manuscript in the world. Every letter is most beautifully drawn and the magnitude of the work is so great that it seems impossible for any single monk to have done it.

The story of the origin of the manuscript, however, not only gives it as the work of one man, but also states it to be the work of a single night. The story runs as follows "A poor monk had been condemned to death, but was told mockingly by his judges that if he was able to copy the whole 'Code' between darkness and dawn he would be saved. Relying upon the impossibility of the task, those who sentenced him furnished him with the original copy of the 'Code,' with pen, ink and parchment, and left him. "Death must have been as little liked in the middle ages as it is now, for the monk, forgetting the hopelessness of his task, commenced it. Before long, however, he saw that he could not save his own life by such weak exertions. and, fearing a cruel and horrible death, ing of a personal difficulty into which he invoked the aid of the prince of darkness, promising to surrender his soul if he were assisted in the task. "The devil kindly obliged by appearmyself, 'Is it true that you are getting on the spot, accepted the contract old and have lost your nerve?' Then and sat down to the work, and next The Devil's Code' was finished, the monk being found dead. The copying clerk from the infernal regions presumably fled away with the poor man's soul as soon as the wicked compact was finished." - Pearson's

With the growth of the business, the problem has become more and more acute, until the company is now practically compelled to adopt some substitute.

Two methods of overcoming the difficulty are proposed. One is the putting into use of a huge automobile, similar to that now in use at Wilkes-Barre by the Stegmaier Brewing Company.

The other method suggested of over-coming the difficulty mentioned, and wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst the construction of a trolley line from the distilling plant to the Benton sta-Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not rec- tion.
