A spectacle of this exciting nature was witnessed by the residents of standing have yielded to it. It enables North Mill street about half past 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. The two runaway teams were employed in hauling wood for the Catawissa paper mill company, from the tract being cleared above Sidler hill to the P. & R. railway near the Mill street crossing, where it will later be loaded on the

When the runaway occurred the two wagons had just been unloaded and the horses were left unattended while the drivers busied themselves in piling up the wood. The horses-four big iron grevs-had plenty of spirit and while standing alone got frightened Bloomsburg on the charge of burglarand started to run. In an instant the teams were beyond the drivers' reach Mill street. Few vehicles were on the street at the time and these were quickly pulled aside and the runaway teams were given the right of way. The delivery wagon of the Danville Milling company, driven by G. A. Fry, which was standing at Pursell's store, escaped by the narrowest possible margin, being driven around the corner just as the teams dashed onto the spot.

As the first team reached Centre street a gentleman standing near rushed into the street and attempted to stop the horses. This merely had the effect of turning the team in another direction and it attempted to escape up Centre street.

In striking the brick pavement, howagainst Thomas. ever, one of the horses fell and carri ed along by the fearful momentum gained it was dragged over the bricks for twenty feet. At this juncture Edward Pursell ran out from the store and caught the other horse. The fallen animal was released by the big crowd which rapidly collected. The horse escaped serious injury, while the harness was only slightly broken. Meanwhile the second team dashed by and continued up Mill street. When its flight would have ended it would be hard to tell, had not 'Bert Gill ran out of his store and pluckily caught one of the horses. It is a question whether he could have brought the team to a stop had not George Sidler, who is employed on the street, rushed up and struck the other horse over the nose with his sweeper. A few min utes after the horses were stopped the driver arrived and took them in charge.
