WORK FOR SYLVIA

By Joanna Single

Sylvia Maine stretched out a gaunt arm and slammed down the window of her little dressmaking shop.

Would folds of the gleaming white satin gown she never leave her father to come to draped on the lovely girl who stood pa- him? He went to see her much oftener tiently before her. She continued:

"The laycock buds is all bustin' out, and the wind smells good enough to eat, but I can't have it blowin' your hair into my eyes and settin' these folds skewin'. You'd have a conniption fit If your weddin' dress didn't set good, and so would I. It would disgrace me. I've made every weddin' all except Mandy Butler's, which was city made, though I don't just say that had anything to do with her bein' divorced in a year's time." Nelly laughed as she replied:

"I'm not sure that I'd know it if it didn't fit, Sylvy. Is it silly to be so happy? Here Harry and I've been engaged only a year, and our folks all like it, and now his grandfather leaves him all that money, and everything's are to the roots of her beautiful blond hair. The withered little spinster dressmaker sighed. Her only love had in anger married another woman and had would not be back till evening. The been unhappy till his early death.

It's silly not to be as happy as the Lord will let you be, Nelly. I don't let | most anxious to have Alice go. myself git too old to forgit that. You be good. There-ain't that sleeve sweet? I got to git this dress of yours | father. But the old man, strangely done this week so's I can git at Annie Paine's. Her weddin's in June too. It's waited awhile, and then John left her the Lord's own month for weddin's. and there had ought to be another besides yours and Annie's in this village." Nelly's resplendent image in the glass made her ask absently;

"What other wedding do you mean?" "John King's and Alice White's." Nelly considered the fit of her little girdle before she said carelessly: "Why, they've been engaged forever. Everybody's used to it. I guess they are themselves, or they'd do something footsteps. He swung in at the gate about it. I know Harry would not and almost ran to take her in his arms. wait that way for me-he-he cares too He kissed her, and he laughed-actual-

Nelly at twenty saw no romance in a ten years' engagement, but Sylvia knew that no woman gets used to being always engaged and never married. She took the last pin from her mouth and explained:

"It's his mother and her father that stand in the way. They are selfish old coots to stand in the way of the children's happiness. Even if Alice's father had any one to look after him I doubt whether Alice, who is the sweetest thing that ever lived, could get along with John's mother. She's a heady old piece if she is smart and handsome, and she likes her own way too well to want a daughter-in-law to have first place in the house John has earned and built with his own hands. His father was no earthly account, and folks do say all Mrs. King married him for was to spite Cornelia Jones, who was dead in love with him and was never married on that account, they Sylvia took the soft satin carefully off over the girl's pink shoulders. Nelly's sympathy was aroused. As she dressed she made a laughing proposal.

Well, something ought to be done, and it's work for you, Sylvy. You're always setting things straight for people. Why don't the old folks get themselves out of the way? Why, they might get married-they might marry each other! You attend to it-vou've done harder things-and I'll help you out.

As the girl stepped out into the sun shine Slyvia sank into a chair. "She beats time!" she muttered. "But it ain't a bad idea. It ain't a half bad idee and I wonder at myself for not thinkin' of it."

Meantime Nelly sauntered toward the King cottage, where John's mother was at work among the flower beds. The widow was a tall, slim old lady, as neat as wax and still handsome in a warlike sort of way, with very black, enappy eyes, white teeth and thick gray hair. Nelly stopped and leaned

"Good morning, Mrs. King." The old lady came along, with her trowel, to smile at the pretty girl. She was extremely fond of any girl who was enter, though I've only just met you, there seems to be a-er-sort of intelgaged or net likely to want her son John. Nelly chatted away.

"I've been for the last fitting of my wedding dress. Bylvy's a gentus! She's perfectly lovely! When is-John going to be married, Mrs. King?" she inquired innocently. The old lady stiffened, but Nelly continued: "I'm so happy that I want everybody to be! Sylvy says that Cornella Jones is setting her cap at Alice's father, and I hope she gets him, so Alice can come here with you and John. She would take the work off your hands, and she's so sweet! But I'll be rather sorry for Mr. White. Cornelia is such a desperate old maid and no cook or housekeeper at all, and he's so good looking and well off that he deserves a better woman to take care of things. Well, men are queer, and she certainly must have Mrs. King snorted.

"She was never a mite pretty, to my mind. She set her cap at John's father Goddard, afterward colonel in the civil when we were girls, but she didn't get him. Oh, must you go?"

Nelly said goodby and went her way, seemingly unconscious of the storm or wrath she awakened in the widow's bosom. John's mother knew he would passable for a "tote team," and the men marry some day in spite of her, and bad been without fresh meat for more she dreaded the day.
