leaped to the opposite window and kicked out a pane, letting in a flood of cold air. Then as quickly as its angle would permit he dashed down the aisle to the other berth.

"Let me help you, madam," he said. "The porter has deserted us." "I seem to be in a sort of well, my berth is so tilted," answered the girl. "If you could just lend me a hand." In a moment a girlish form was standing beside him. "Are we killed?" she asked, her voice trembling a little in spite of its brave tone.

"Not vet." answered Wilton, "but we'd better get out at once. The gas tanks are leaking.

Together they groped down the aisle to find a brakeman forcing his way into the wreckage at the end of the car. "Any one hurt in here?" he asked. flashing his lantern in their faces. "The porter didn't stop to see." "All safe," answered Wilton, "What's the trouble?

"Open switch. Banged into coal chute. Engineer and fireman killed. Lot of coach passengers hurt. You are the only Pullmans. Better get out of this." And he led the way up to the steep embankment down which the train had plunged, then trotted off down the track, leaving them alone beside the tangle of trucks and rails that marked the path of the wreck. Wilton picked up a forgotten lantern and for the first time turned to look at the girl whom he had rescued. Then he gave a great gasp of astonishment. "Betty Allis! Where on earth!" "Jack Wilton! Where".

The two stood silent in a hearty hand grasp. Suddenly Jack fell to trembling, and for a moment a panic seized him

"Betty Allis," he repeated, "to think that some one that I knew and-that I knew was in this catastrophe and so near death! It makes me-it makes

Here Betty broke the tension with a trembling little laugh that was none the less merry.

"But we are both safe and sound, so what's to worry us? Let's find out where we both came from and"- Then suddenly she became sober. "First, let's go see if we can be of any use down there." And she glanced beyond Wilton, where flitting lanterns and a confusion of voices marked the place of real catastrophe. Together they hurried down the tracks, to find that all that could be done was being done for the sufferers and that now all that was possible was to wait for the wrecking train.

Wilton drew Betty away from the crowd.

"We can't help," he said, "and you are shivering with the cold. I'm going back to get your coat and my traps and yours. Then we will make a camp here on the bank."

A few minutes later found them toasting before a brisk little fire that Wilton had kindled, while over in the east low streamers of pink silhouetted the dull outlines of a mining village. "Shall we try to find shelter in the town?" asked Wilton.
