

Whatever caused Harry Lee, bachelor, club man and a good deal of a cynic to saunter into the Central depot that xplain except by laying it to fate. He wasn't going anywhere, didn't want to see anybody in particular, and he always kept clear of passenger depots on account of tearful old women and crying children. On this occasion he had scarcely caught sight of one tearful old woman when somebody caught sight of him.

"And who on earth told you that 1 was going to Buffalo?" exclaimed a voice at his elbow as he turned to go the subject.

It was Miss Remington, whom he had known fairly well for a year past and who had sometimes struck him as being rather good looking and of engaging manners. Just now she was looking unusually well in her traveling suit and her eyes shining with excitement.

"I-I came to say farewell," replied Lee, with ready wit.

"How nice of you! My trunk was sent on half an hour ago ahead of me and must be in the baggage room. 1 know you will take my ticket and get it checked for me. Brother Will said he would surely be here, but something has happened to detain him." "It will be something to remember all my life." A child of ten, a bachelor of forty or an old woman of ninety can check a trunk when once the feat of getting It to the depot has been accomplished. All you have to do is to point it out with one hand while you show your ticket with the other and tell the baggage master that he must make no mistake and check it for Oshkosh instead of Kalamazoo.

Harry Lee had that trunk identified and checked in seven minutes, and he was feeling rather proud over the fact when a plain looking woman of forty appealed to him. She was looking for a trunk with a broken handle, but thus far it had eluded her. It tried to dodge Harry Lee, but in vain. He had his eves on it in no time.

Just at this juncture a girl of eighteen, dressed in mourning and looking tearful and anxious, wanted help. Herunk was all right as to handles, but with a humble looking trunk had had it checked there. Two telegrams had passed and he had her address. In the 0

She was a refined, ladylike girl and in broidered dress was tending a flower mourning for an aunt who had left her garden, a lace parasol in one hand and $50,000, but yet she used language tinged with acid. Next time she went traveling and had to appeal to a man for help she would make sure that he knew enough to check his own trunk, the more disapproval, the toy spaniel or and so forth, and so forth. There he found Miss Remington. "I am not going to blame you at all," she said as she met him. "It was all my fault in thinking that you knew anything about the operation of railroads. You could have loaded that trunk into an auto and had it into the Staten Island ferry in half an hour. Mr. Lee proceeded to explain, but it was not much of an explanation. However, the more he explained and the more he failed to explain the more he became interested in Miss Remington. It was a matter of four days before the big trunk, the little trunk and the one handled trunk reached their respective owners. The chapter was closed then and there with the plain looking woman, but not so with one of the others. Ever since that date, and particularly during the last three months, the bachelor club man has found it necessary to go up the road to talk trunk business, and he finds that the most effective way to remind Miss Remington of her duty toward the diamond ring she wears is to suggest that he take a trip to Syracuse to see the other young woman about her trunk.

For the first time in a year, so far as he could remember, the club bachelor had made himself useful for a few minutes, and there was something like elation in his eve as he left the depot to continue his saunter. Twenty-four hours later he received a call from young Winchester, who had an open telegram in his hand and who bluntly inquired:
