STOPPED THE OVATION.

Richard Wagner's Peculiar Experience In Vienna. When Wagner was at the height of his popularity he visited Vienna. Baron von Beust, then chancellor of the empire, was informed that the Prussian party intended to give him an immense serenade-a serenade which would have the air of German protest against the tendency of the ministry to make the union of Hungary and Aus tria more intimate. The demonstration promised to arouse strong feeling.

"Your excellency is warned," said the chancellor's advisers. "It is impossible to stop this manifestation unless Wagner goes away, and he loves ovations too well. Nothing will induce him to depart."

"You think so," said Beust, with a

An hour later Wagner was invited to dine with the chancellor. He was flattered by the invitation and accepted it. After dinner, at which Beust was delightfully affable and entertaining, the chancellor remarked: "Herr Wagner, are you interested in autographs? I have some very curious ones to show you." And he opened a portfolio where were letters of Palmerston, Bismarck, Napoleon III., Heine and others.

Suddenly turning to a paper, dated 1848, he said: "Ah, look at this. It is very curious. What would your friend his highness the king of Bavaria say if this paper, which would be significant in connection with the political serenade which the Germans are going to give you, should be published tomorrow in the Vienna papers?"

The composer examined the paper and recognized, with surprise, an old proclamation of one Richard Wagner, who, an ardent revolutionist in 1848, had proposed to the youth of that time to set fire to the palace of the king of Saxony. He saw his autograph and that it might be the means of getting him into serious trouble. "Very curious, is it not, Herr Wagsaid the minister. "Very curious, your excellency," replied his guest.

The next morning Richard Wagner left Vienna, recalled to Baircuth by urgent business.—Strand Magazine.

STORE WINDOW LIGHTS.

Regulations For Their Control as Applied In Berlin.

The regulation of artificial lighting in connection with window displays is a subject which has been given comparatively little attention by the municipalities of this country, considering the extent to which it is used for this purpose in these days. That this phase of the lighting question demands closer scrutiny there can be no doubt, and it might be well for information on the matter to look to those cities which have given it study. Stringent regulations have been adopted in Berlin and other European cities, where merchants were inclined to take advantage of laxity in the premises. In Berlin lamps outside shop windows must not be lower than ten feet above the pavement or project more than forty inches from the wall. Where the lighting in the windows is done by oil, petroleum, gas flame or Welsbachs there must always be a sheet of glass not less than one-tenth of an inch thick under the lamps and running the whole length and breadth of the shop windows, so as to completely cover the articles in the window, and nothing is to be put above the lamps. The lamps must be at least forty inches below any inflammable part of the construction and ten inches from any such part horizontally.

There are also regulations as to iron screens where there is bare wood and as to efficient ventilation. Bare flames are not allowed in igniting the gas. This must be done by chemical or ele trical kindlers or by electric distance spark kindling arrangements especially sanctioned by the authorities. The regulations for incandescent electric lamps are about equally strict.-Muulcipal Journal and Engineer.

UNIFORM STEPS.

With Them Many Falls Downstairs Would Be Averted.

Falls on staircases are of rather common occurrence, especially in houses where the stairs are steep, dark or built with sharp turns. The frequent causes of serious falls have suggested that the likelihood of accident of this kind would be lessened considerably if all steps were built according to standard of height and breadth.

A child's fall on the stairs is apt to be bad enough, and for an adult it may have serious consequences, but for an aged person the result is not unlikely to be fatal; hence it is held that the construction of staircases deserves more attention than is ordinarily paid to it.

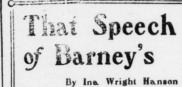

The trouble is that stair climbing is not a natural method of progression for the human being. A child may learn to walk with ease, but it is a long time before it can ascend a stairway in an upright position without losing its balance. Stairs have been brought about by necessity, however, and the ordinary person has become so accustomed to them that he dashes up and down them without paying any more heed to his steps than if he were walking on a surface level. Motion becomes purely mechanical, without any effort of will, and the muscles of the leg automatically adjust themselves so as to lift the foot to the height of the steps on the stairway most frequently used. The stride unconsciously becomes adapted to a certain height

This unconscious estimate of height chaperon's husband; often is the cause of many falls. When a different stairway is used the foot is a trip is likely to occur. On narrow you know it is rare to find a really and steep staircases there should be a clutch following a stumble would if her nose" mean the saving of many limbs and heads. Had Irinda been beautiful or had she known that there were times when she was very charming indeed it never would have happened. Irinda's worst fault was morbidness when she remembered that she was sallow and pale eyed and had sandy hair when she would have preferred pink and white complexion, dark eyes and golden hair. She would have added dimples and beautifully arched eyebrows, too, if she could have had her way about it. As a matter of fact, 11 was only when she was remembering her ugliness that she really was ugly. Her face in her times of forgetting plo tured quite pleasantly her pure spirit and loving heart.

Francisco and a week of grand opera. Jim, her satellite, was along, not because he appreciated grand opera, but because he appreciated Irinda.

So much for the hero and heroine. Next the villain, to whom his Celtic mother had given a ravishing pair of blue eyes and a tongue tuned to soft words. Barney was not a villainous villain at all--just a warm hearted boy who loved everybody and wanted to be loved by everybody in turn. He must have the villain's part because there cannot be a second hero and because-But you shall see.

As the train sped along Jim went to the smoker-not to smoke, for he had never learned how, but because he feared Irinda might be tiring of him. Barney immediately took his place.

Soon after a lady and gentleman poarded the train. As Irinda's seat had been turned so that her back was toward the engine, the newcomers were in full view of her. The lady bent her head, and some rice fell from her smart brown turban. The gentleman smiled, and the lady's cheeks went red as roses. Then she opened her magazine and tried to look unconectous.

"Oh, Barney," breathed Irinda, "isn't the bride lovely? Do look at that butterfly in her veil just at the corner of her sweet red mouth! See that perfect curve from her forehead to her chin as she looks out the window. Now, quick, See her beautiful eyes. They're as brown as her dainty hat."

Barney's ravishing eyes glanced at the beautiful lady, Barney's quick mind took in the situation, and Barney's warm heart rose to the occasion.

Smilingly he turned to Irinda. "Why, I never think of a woman's looks, whether she has a pretty face or not. That doesn't appeal to me. When know a woman she attracts me or not according to whether or not she has magnetism. Magnetism is as good a name as any other for what no one understands. But, believe me, Irinda, magnetism is the charm of a woman, not a pretty face." Barney's blue eyes said so much more than his tongue, rolling ever so slightly his "r's," that Irinda's colorless face flushed becomingly. The eyes said that she Irinda Bowen, had the magnet ism, or whatever it was, and that it had never occurred to Barney whether or not she was pretty. Happy thoughts fluttered around Irinda for the rest of the journey. Barney left her, and Jim came back. She emiled at him. He didn't know it was an impersonal smile, born of Barney's words. She remembered the day when at fiercely at her lack of beauty, and Jim had answered:

"What difference does it make what you look like? You are always beautiful to me, Irinda." He never knew why she had pushed him away when he would have put his arms around her. Stupid old Jim couldn't know that he had made a tacit acknowledgment of her ugliness, while Barney-why, Barney had never thought anything about it.

Grand opera week went by in a diapason of glory. Irinda was wonderfully happy, and every day she told herself shyly and with many blushes how much she was caring for Barney It was not till they were homeward bound that the tragedy happened. The tragedy? No, it was not the

In reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some uterine disease. The Physician, knorant of the cause of suffering, keeps up his treatment until large bills are mide. The suffering patient gets no better the present of the wrong treatment, but probably worse. A proper medicine like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of

AMEND THE PRIMARY LAW. The new primary law seems to have worked pretty well in various parts of DIRECTORS OF THE POOR the State. One of the greatest defects, however, is the absence of provision for publicity of the returns. If the election board fails to post the figures, and there is nothing compelling it to do so, voters will have to rely on statements the board members may choose to make or else wait until the following Wednesday when the county commissioners begin the count. An amendment providing that the public be informed officially of results seems
