Veto Axe Wielded by Governor.

Governor Stuart had a field day yes terday wielding the veto axe and several measures of the utmost importance were vetoed by him. Before using the axe, however, the Governor approved the Casey employers liability bill, which makes employers' li-able for damages where injury is inflicted by the carelessness of an employe, and the bill repealing the tion of the act of 1868 which makes railway companies liable for damages to railway mail clerks in cases of accident in and about a railway station. Then the Governor took up his veto axe, chopping the following :

The Governor vetoes the act providing for the creation of a State Board of Examiners of Horseshoers for the reason that there does not appear to be any public necessity for legislation of this character at this time.

The act amending the health act of 1895, providing that certificates of sucessful vaccination or of previously having had smallpox shall not be required in any locality in this State when smallpox is not known to exist in that locality, is also vetoed. The amendment applies to vaccination certificates necessary for a child to have before entering school.

The Governor wants to know how the disease shall be known to exist or whom it shall be known to exist before certificates are required. 'In cavalry. Later he was transferred to view of the fact that vaccination is a a captaincy in the Sixteenth Pennsylpreventative measure," says the Governor, "it would probably afford little protection in any locality to enforce the requirements relative to said certificates only after smallpox is known to exist in order to make it the duty of the school authorities to require certificates." He does not think it advisable to remove what seem to be necessary precautions.

The Governor also vetoes another mine worker bill advocated by the miners which provides that no minor child under fourteen years of age shall be employed outside of an anthracite colliery and no child under sixteen on the inside of an anthracite colliery.
