Jury Duty. Scarcely an important case comes to trial which does not show the difficulty of securing for the defendant what is regarded as one of the most precious of civil liberties, "a jury of his peers'' to judge him. The difficulty leads to constant criticism of "the jury system" as if the thing itself, which the people with so much trouble compelled King John to guarantee to them, were fundamentally at fault. Less is said about the innumerable flimsy excuses offered by talesmen to escape service, and about the almost universal unwillingness of the average citizen to do jury duty, says Youth's Companion. Men whose word in business matters would be taken anywhere, who are attendants at church and members of religious associations the phrase is what is noticed. The "duty" part is forgotten. One of the orators at the recent Memorial day exercises quoted that excellent definition which describes patriotism as the desire to give one's country the kind of service it needs, at the time when it needs it. The patriotism of the men of '61 was displayed in military service, because that was the service the country most needed at that time. Today the need is of another sort-a loyalty to every duty which makes life and property safer and the country stronger and more secure in happiness and prosperity. The serving on a jury, the cheerful paying of just taxes without attempt to "swear them off," the acceptance of responsibility in city, state or nation-these are just as much duties as observing the rules of the board of health or being honest in business. No man can, afford to shirk them, for if he does his own self-respect suffers, as well as the general well-being of his community.

To Reduce Size of Conference.

Local Methodists are interested in the discussions of a proposition to reduce the size of the general conference, which it is alleged, has been growing unwieldy in recent years, and now so large a body that its deliber ations are hampered.

The Methodist general conference is more than twice as large as the national house of representatives. The Methodits Episcopal church is growing therefore it is urged that the bas-is of representation should be changed reducing the number of delegates.

The matter was presented to the it was said to have died in committee never having been brought up for action and this notwithstanding the fact that at least 20 memorials had been sent to the conference asking legislation that should reduce its numbers. Now the matter is being agitated odists hold that the action looked for they would arrive. is by no means certain.

TOWNSPEOPLE SEEK THE RIVER BRIDGE

Not the least of Danville's natural advantages is the fact that it is situated right upon the bank of the majestic Susquehanna. Our town is doubly fortunate, however, in the circumstof our principal street.

Interesting Foreigners. A dozen emigrants fresh from the other side of the ocean arrived at South Danville on the 5:50 Pennsylvania train Tuesday evening and proceeded to the foreign quarter of Danville located on Northumberland street, where they found a welcome. There was a difference of opinion among those who professed to know something about the foreigners as to whether they were Germans or Austrians. There were ten men, one woman and a half grown girl. They made a good appearance, being well dressed, neat and clean.

Their odd manners alone betrayed the fact that they were new arrivals in this country. The ten men carry-ing trunks and valises took the middle of Mill street and thus marched the entire distance from the bridge to the D. L. & W. crossing, where they took the railroad.

One of our German-Americans explained why the newly arrived foreigners walked in the middle of the street. In many of the smaller places in European countries there are no sidewalks. The people who arrived Tuesday night are no doubt used to walking in the street, besides they are so acceptomed to the harsh laws at home that they would not take any chances by obtruding themselves on the sidewalks in a strange country.

The ten men will work at the Reading Iron works. weit as one week's wages paid him Saturday. Besides, it was explained that there was pretty good reason for believing that he had still other money in his possession.
The precaution was taken too late. Lemon was already practically penii-less. On Sunday evening when he was taken to the hotel Chief Mincemoyer in looking after him discovered that he was in possession of a trifle over twelve dollars. Yesterday when taken to the lock-up he was in possession of only a fraction of a dollar.
Not only had he been relieved of some twelve dollars during Monday forenoon, but the man explained that he had been robbed of some seventeen dollars on Sunday. In addition to this as will be recalled, there is still a bal-ance to be accounted for.
Altogether, the affair is a most dis-graceful one. Aside from the offense of getting drunk on Sunday there was robbery of a most contemptible sort committed.
