The Arrivals in a Year.

The proper department at Washington informs the people of the country that the number of immigrants landing at the various American ports during the official year ending June 30, 1907 was 1,285,349. This is much larger than the exhibit of any previous year. The figures provoke varied feelings in different breasts. Just what influence the newcomers are going to have upon those among whom they have made their homes must be left for the future to determine. # ALL ON ACCOUNT

A trunk unloaded by mistake at a residence on Vine street Tuesday night was the innocent can se of great excitement, which kept a family up half the night and brought to the premises not only a policeman bur also the district attorney.

Shortly after the arrival of the even ing trains one of the omnibuses was came to that township when he was observed to laboriously climb the hill thirteen years of age and resided there at the northern end of Vine street and residence of Mrs. Benjamin Cook and proceed to unload a trunk.

Mrs. Cook's first thought was that she was getting a visitor, but finding that the trunk was not accompanied by any one she was mystified and asked for an explanation. The busman informed her that he had been directed to leave the trunk at No. 219 Vine street by a young man, who got off the train at the D. L. & W. station, but who for some reason did not wish to accompany it. Mrs. Cook was sure that there must be some mistake, but the busman was positive that he understood the man rightly and that he had delivered the trunk precisely where he had been directed to leave it. Mrs. Cook insisted that he reload the trunk and take it away with him, but the man couldn't see why he should disobey orders and despite the woman's protestations he drove away leaving the trunk at her house.

Mrs. Cook was the only occupant of the house at the time and no sooner was she left alone with the trunk than she became very nervous. There was something so unusual about the affair. All the "trunk mysteries," with their shocking details, concerning which she had read for many years past came to her mind. The trunk in itself was commonplace and innocent-looking enough, but that did not alter matters any. Finally it grew dark and after that hour the mysterious trunk seemed to inspire a new dread. The woman could not get away from the innocent victim of some dreadful affair and her imagination pictured a thousand uncanny things that the trunk might contain. With such a companion sleep was out of the questiving, she could not even think of retrieval. Mrs. Cook was the only occupant of the house at the time and no sooner tion; she could not even think of retiring.

She stood it until 11 o'clock; she stood it even half an hour longer and then, at 11:30 o'clock, too indignant and nervous to stand it any longer, she hurried down town to seek aid from the police. She ran across Officer Voris and soon made him acquainted with the whole affair.

The officer was at a loss to know how to proceed. It was probably all a mistake and he did not feel that he had a right to throw the trunk out of doors. At this juncture fortunately he happened to run across District Attorney Major C. P. Gearhart, who owing to the extraordinary circumstances of the case, agreed to accompany the officer to Mrs. Cook's premises and conduct an investigation.

Arriving at the spot the men closely examined the trunk; there was nothing to suggest anything shady or off color about it. Still, they had to admit that the circumstances were all very extraordinary and after carefully considering the subject in all its bearings, the officials concluded that to quiet the woman's fears, if for no other reason, they were justified in open-

Fortunately one of the men had on his ring a key which fitted the lock. It was a moment of deep suspense as the key was manipulated and a clicking sound a moment later indicated that the lock was open. The lid was raised, when there lay exposed to view a harmless assortment of male and female wearing apparel-nothing more. Administrator's Notice. Almost at the same moment the lid was Estate of William R. Miller, late of reclosed and then it was found that the Township of Liberty, in the the ill-fitting key which had sufficed County of Montour and State of to unlock the trunk would not relock a frame barn and other usual farm pannsylvania deceased. by those in authority.

Yesterday morning a dapper young man, who was lamenting the loss of his trunk, got on the trail of that particular busman who had delivered the mysterious trunk at Mrs. Cook's residence. The rest is easily told and shows how men can be mistaken when they feel sure that they are right. The stranger declares that he ordered the trunk delivered at Bank street. The busman is equally postive that he said "Vine" street.
