NORTH MILL STREET FINALLY APPROVED

The reconstruction or paving of which in one form or another has been before the public so long, is at last a closed incident. The street has been accepted by the State highway department under the terms of contract and bond

A communication received by the borough from State Highway Commissioner Joseph W. Hunter in relation to the matter explains that the con tractor is under obligation to make any repairs upon the road that may be necessary prior to May 12, 1908. After that date the road will be in the hands of the borough to maintain.

The State highway commissione calls the borough's attention especially to the fact that unless the borough council maintains this road in proper condition it will forfeit its right to the State aid in maintenance, which it would otherwise receive in cash.

The law authorizes the payment by the State of fifty per cent. of the cost of maintenance, but this is paid only when the road is kept in proper repair.

IS RECOVERED

The river was the center of much interest yesterday both because of the terrible tragedy at Mifflinville and the fact that the water had reached one of the highest, stages in a year past. The crest of the flood yesterday morning washed the 13-foot mark on the gaage on the first pier of the river bridge on the south side. The river remained stationary during yesterday. The flood, associated as it was with the terrible loss of life only a few miles up stream, seemed to combine with the usual attribute of grandeur something that awoke in the mind mingled emotions of dread and awe Indeed, no one could look upon the irresistible sweep of the wide waters, realizing the wreck, the havoc and the loss of life it had caused, without experiencing a feeling akin to depression. The monotonous wash of the flood among the stone piers of the bridge was mournful music to the ear, while the pieces of driftwood, rising and sinking in the boiling current, brought to the mind uncanny suggestions of human bodies being swept along by merciless flood.

These impressions were heightened by the fact that large sections of the falsework belonging to the ill-fated bridge whereon so many lost their lives passed down the stream with other driftwood during the morning and forenoon. Not only were these grewsome timbers observed by persons on the bridge, but a large number of heavy pieces were dragged from the river at South Danville and piled upon the shore.

Not in many years have such large quantities of driftwood come down stream. Much of it comprised the timber that escaped from the headwaters of the Fishingcreek and was very valuable. It was not until yesterday morning, however, that the timbers belonging to the false work of the Mifflinville bridge reached this point. Jack and Jill were both quite ill Now each is well and wiser, For blues and headar' as have to go, When they take an 'mary Riser. DeWitt's Little Early Riser Pills are sold by Paules & Co. and proved especially interesting. The errors most commonly made, he said, involve the use of the adjective, pronoun and verb. Of the adjectives that are apt to be improperly used the one most overworked is "awful." This is a favorite with boys, who lose sight of the fact that there are a very few really "awful" things in the world. Only those things which inspire one with dread or fear are "aw ful." In the same way girls overdo the adjective 'lovely," forgetting that very few things in the world are really "lovely." The speaker admitted that ladies sometimes and men once in a very great while are "lovely." But with girls when they speak everything is "lovely." "Splendid" is an adjective that men and women alike use erroneously. Comparatively few things, the speaker said, are "splendid." Yet women in describing a pie or cake, or a new dress de-clare it is "splendid." Nothing seemed worse, however, than the misuse of the word "nicely" as practiced

Of all the errors in the use of pronouns, he said, the ugliest occurs in the expression, "Between You and I. '

"Have went" and "Have saw" are errors most frequently made by men and women who have had no opportunity for acquiring a knowledge of Such persons, therefore, grammar. are entitled to much consideration and should never be laughed at.

"Have did" is an error nearly always made by a person well up in society. In suggesting a remedy for incorrect expression the speaker declared that it is essential that the pupil master the principles of grammar. With-
