About Armies and Navies.

There is a decided difference of op inion among good Americans concerning the necessity of keeping up the strength of the army and constructing a navy second in power to that of Great Britain alone. Some declare that proper regard for the nation's Some declare dignity demands a considerable army and a specially powerful navy. Others affirm that no nation means to go out of its way to harm us and that respect for the traditions of the fathers requires that we avoid complications with Old World powers and decline to follow the advice of those who would make us a military nation.

Whatever conrgess may do eventually, it threatened to adopt a course to ase the peace men, at least so far as the army is concerned. It hesitated about increasing the pay of non-com-missioned officers and privates, although the statement has been made by eminent officers that the army is in some of its branches a mere shell and that it is likely to remain such unless there is a material increase in the pay of the common soldier. It is true that a period of hard times will help the recruiting business, for many young men who find themselves out of employment will be tempted to enlist. But hard times will build no warships. And the hard times are not

The friends of peace claim that warlike preparations do not accord with the principles of the Christian relig-They remind us that its founder ion. is called the Prince of Peace. They tell us that he came to convert spears into pruning hooks and swords into ares. And they insist that advocate the enlargement of the strengthening of armies are not true Christians. But the other side retorts that bad as war is it is always followed by the world's better-ment. They declare that the battle is the forerunner of civil freedom. They tell us that the strong nations of the world, the civilized nations, the Christian nations, have the most formidable armies and the strongest navies and that they command and preserve the peace by reason of their constant preparedness to resent insults.

It seems to be pretty certain that the aggressive part of the country is much more numerous that the advocates of non-resistance. Very few men and women have yet reached that state of Christian perfection which would enable them to turn the other cheek to the enemy who struck them or to walk two miles with the strong man who compelled them to go on with him or to hand over the cloak to the robbe. who had appropriated the coat. And since a nation is the sum of its individual units, it is quite clear that no country that is strong enough to resent an affront by an appeal to arms would hesitate about war, no matter what the Christian profesison of its people or its rulers. We are not there to explain the apparent difference between Christian profession andpractice; we will not undertake to say why most Christians regard Tolstoy, the apostle of non-resistance, as a lanatic; we merely note the fact.

Better Pay for Soldiers.

There will be less complaint of trouble in obtaining army recruits when the men are paid a decent salary, and accorded better treatment. Against the contention that the American soldier ought to be better paid it had been asserted that he was the best paid soldier in the world. But Major John H. Beacom, formerly military attache of the American embassy at London, demonstrated that the British is better paid than the American soldier. Only the Briton can be used for purposes of comparison, as British and differ greatly from both, continental service being compulsory and com-

With regard to the cost of living here and in Great Britain, Maj. living here and in Great Britain, Major Beacon demonstrates that it is a 10 to 9 in favor of the British soldier. Taking into consideration all factors, including cost of living, he shows that the financial condition of first-year privates in the American and British armies is as 13 to 14, that in the third year this becomes 14, for the American and 20 for the Briton, while for the regimental sergeant major It is 40 for the American and 79 for the Brit-

There are some changes in the method of compiling annual reports in that just prepared by Fish Commissioner Meehan. Tables have been stricken out wherever possible or reduced to the very smallest dimensions. In other places the commissioner has had the superintendents of the hatcheries expand their reports to him so as to explain the methods in fish cultural work pursued during the year and the commissioner himself in his portion views the entire work of fish hatching.

The report shows a very large amount of work done. There are eight hatcheries from which there were distributed nearly 670,000,000 fish, of which over 300,000,000 were food fish exclusively, like the white fish, lake herring, shad and yellow perch, and about 9. 000,000 purely game fish, like trout and bass, and the remainder about 350, 000,000, which are classed as both food State hatcheries last year produced 6,-000,000 young fish. The stock was so lowing year.

Ancient Posters.

It is probably the general impression that posters and handbills are modern inventions, but it has been discovered that the ancient Romans practiced this method of advertising. In digging at Herculaneum there was brought to light a pillar covered with bills, one on top of another. The paste used to stick them was made of gum arable. The bills, when separated and examined, were found to be programmes and an nouncements of public meetings and even election proclamations

AN ORDINANCE. REDUCES FRACTURE IN HORSE'S LEG

A valuable colt belonging to W. F. A valuable colt belonging to W. F. Slagle, of Bloomsburg, broke its leg on Saturday night. The colt a year old, is standard bred and is so highly prized by the owner that he determined to resort to extreme measures to save the animal. He accordingly sent for Veterinarian J. J. Kline, of this city, who on Sunday successfully duced the fracture.

Ordinarily when a horse breaks a leg it means the death of the animal. The attempt to save the horse by reducing the fracture and relying upon the bones knitting is attended with much uncertainty and after any amount of labor and anxiety and much suffering on the part of the dumb animal the operation may prove a failure and the horse may have to be killed in the end. Under the circumstances except when the horse is young and possesses more than an ordinary value and the fracture occurs where it can easily be treated any attempt to save the horse

W. F. Slagle lives in Bloomsburg. but the colt whose leg is broken is kept on Hagenbuch's farm some three miles beyond Light Street. Dr. Kline in response to a hurry call went up to Bloomsburg Sunday forenoon and was driven out to the Hagenbuch farm. He found the injury to consist of an oblique fracture of the long pastern bone of the right hind leg. The animal was suffering intense pain and refused to eat.

The colt had been kept in a box stall and a board, broken loose some distance from the ground, showed how the injury had been sustained.

The operation of reducing the fracture in a horse's leg differs little from the setting of a broken bone in the limb of a human being. In the first place there had to be several strong men on hand to hold down the animal, which lay on its side. After the bone was set the latter was held in place with sole leather splints bound starch bandages and these reinforced with hickory splints bound with stout straps.

After the operation the colt seemed relieved of pain and standing on three feet began to eat. All the conditions are so favorable that Dr. Kline feels confident that the animal will come out all right. Although the colt may be able to stand on its leg in three months time it will take it from six months to a year to fully recover.

Among the horses seen on our streets is a valuable animal owned by Edward Bogart of this county, which sustained a fracture when four years old, but which fully recovered after having the bone set by Dr. Kline and given treatment similar to what is being done in the case of Mr. Slagle's colt.
