BOTH AIDED IN KILLING COBBLER

What will undoubtedly prove to be one of the greatest murder trials in the history of Northumberland county will be that of "Pimple Face" Joe Keckeskie at the coming term of criminal court at Sunbury...

It developed at the hearing last week that while running away from the scene of the murder Joe met Stanny Marcavich, a Shamokin saloonkeeper, who was called as a witness...

The Northumberland county officials Saturday endeavored to get Stanny Marcavich to repeat his former confession but he stated that he would not leave his cell to testify in the case.

Mr. J. E. Amedon, constructing engineer for the VanAminge Granite company, the firm that will construct the memorial to the soldiers and sailors of Montour county, was in Danville Saturday making the preliminary arrangements for the erection of the shaft.

Mr. Amedon, in company with Hon. James Foster and several others of the committee, went over the ground. He said that last Friday the first car load of tools and constructing machinery had been shipped from Gettysburg, where the VanAminge company has just completed the United States memorial to those who fought in the Rebellion.

The material for the monument will be shipped from Winoboro, South Carolina. Mr. Amedon stated, within the next ten days, and immediately upon its arrival in Danville the work of constructing will begin.

PLEASED WITH SITE.

Mr. Amedon was greatly pleased with the fine site that has been chosen for the monument in the new park. SUSPECT WAS RELEASED

Saturday morning when our citizens awoke and found that a man had been arrested and was in jail awaiting identification as an accomplice in the hold up near Maudsels the excitement which had begun to subside a little, was soon as intense as it was the evening before.

At an early hour as practicable Thomas Malady, the victim of the hold up, was taken to the jail, but he failed to identify the prisoner as one of the highwaymen. The fellow accordingly was released.

The arrest of the suspect was not accomplished without a great deal of hard work that brought into full exercise the detective ability of the police force of Danville and of Bloomsburg.

Chief Mincevory lost no time making arrangements for a trip to Rupert.

Learning, however, that inside of an hour a train would pass the Rupert tower, which the suspects might jump and thereby elude pursuit, he telephoned to Chief of Police Baum, of Bloomsburg, requesting him to hurry to Rupert and arrest the men should they attempt to get away before the Danville officers arrived.

It was shortly after 11 o'clock when Officers Mincevory and Voris, accompanied by Sheriff Williams and District Attorney Gearhart, in a two-seated carriage set out for Rupert.

Meanwhile, the intense excitement that existed in Danville was transferred to Bloomsburg. Chief Baum after arming himself with a shot gun started out to summon citizens to assist in running down the highwaymen.

The first person summoned was Edward Shafer, proprietor of the post office on Market square. Two others, Charles VanLiew and Frank Dietrick, were in succession called out and pressed into service.

In a two seated spring wagon the party of four drove over to East Bloomsburg, and cautiously made its way toward a point opposite Rupert, where at last accounts the suspects had been in hiding.

At the very moment that Chief Baum and his party approached their destination a freight pulled over the bridge from Rupert and the three suspects were seen making their way toward the train. Chief Baum and his party moved on the fleeing trio.

At the very moment that Chief Baum and his party approached their destination a freight pulled over the bridge from Rupert and the three suspects were seen making their way toward the train.

A message was sent to Catawissa requesting that the train be stopped there and an effort be made to capture the suspects. Meanwhile the arrested man, held securely by a pair of nippers, was taken over the bridge toward Rupert, where the party was met by the Danville officers who took the prisoner in charge.

It was after 4 o'clock Saturday morning when our officers arrived in Danville with their prisoner. Sheriff Williams remained in Bloomsburg until Saturday prosecuting a search for the highwayman at that place.

The prisoner was committed to jail, where, as above stated, an unsuccessful attempt was made to identify him later. He gave his name as Frank Lowe and said he lives in Williamsport. He is only 18 years of age.

Stubborn Fire.

An alarm of fire caused some excitement about noon Saturday. The fire was located in one of the company houses on the south side of Centre street and originated in the chimney. The fire was discovered in its incipency and had it not been that it had communicated to the interior of the wall, it could have been extinguished by a few bucketfuls of water.

The Continental hose company was on the scene of the fire a few minutes after the alarm and by cutting a hole in the slate roof by the side of the chimney was able to get a stream of water on the fire. The flames were soon extinguished.

The house is occupied by Charles Barnhart and stands next to the old school house, now used as a knitting mill. Had a fire gained headway in the dwelling the knitting mill would have been in great danger and would hardly have escaped damage.

FIRE DESTROYED WOOLEN MILL

Presumably set by sparks from a Susquehanna, Bloomsburg and Berwick locomotive, fire on Monday afternoon destroyed the Sands woolen mill at Mordansville, Columbia county, partially consumed the Sands hotel and damaged several other buildings. The fire probably would have destroyed the village had it not been for the Millville Fire company, which was hurried to the helpless town.

A mammoth spruce tree proved an effective shelter for the hotel building and held the fire back. The home of Emanuel Summers was somewhat damaged.

The woolen mill was owned by Charles Sands. It had not been in operation for a year or more. The loss will reach $15,000, it is said.

The fire, during the height of the mill's burning, was terrific. Brands were carried into the woods, and in a half hour a fierce fire was raging there. The men, after the fire had been extinguished in the village, turned their attention to the woods fire.

Flare Deaths on the Fourth.

In the current number of the Journal of the American Medical Association some interesting statistics relating to the casualties on the Fourth of July are given.

It is shown that 1,263 persons lost their lives from the use of explosives last Fourth; 5,460 were injured, of whom eleven were totally blinded, ninety-three lost one eye, fifty-seven lost an arm, leg or hand, while 124 lost one or more fingers. While there was considerable reduction in the death rate from tetanus, yet more persons died and more were injured than during any previous observance of the Fourth of July in the history of the country.

MRS. J. B. GEARHART—AN APPRECIATION

To the Montour American: Sitting under a master teacher long ago, a young woman read a criticism of Shakespeare's tragedy of Lear. She complained of the great poet because of what seemed to be the untimely and causeless death of Cordelia the gentlest, the sweetest, the most divine of all of Shakespeare's women. It seemed to her that it was cruel to have Cordelia die. The master teacher reminded his pupil that one of our own poets has said, that the quick lightning and the pestilence have never been known to make nice discriminations, when let slip from God's right hand.

BID EXCEEDED APPROPRIATION

It begins to look as though there might be unexpected delay before the work on the remodeling of the male infirmary at the hospital for the insane gets under way. Thursday was the date set for opening the bids for raising and extending the building. But one proposal was received, however, and that was rejected as too high.

The plans and specifications, provide for raising the male infirmary eight feet, adding another story. The remodeling of course carries with it an extension of plumbing and of the lighting and the heating systems.

For "raising and extending" the male infirmary the legislature appropriated the sum of $25,000, which of course, is all the money available for the improvement. The single bid received, however, which was from Mosier and Summers, agreed to remodel the building as per plans and specifications for the sum of $40,000. This exceeded the amount appropriated for the work by fifteen thousand dollars.

The only course open was to reject the proposal and this was precisely what was done.

The board then decided to readvertise for bids, setting Thursday, October 1st as the day when they will be opened. It was decided that the plans and specifications on which the last bids were invited be modified in some particulars. The idea is not to produce a planer, a less convenient or durable building, but merely to arrange the contract in such a way that it may appeal to builders and result in bringing out a larger number of proposals.

It is a little too early to assume that the plans and specifications as approved by the Governor call for a building that can not be built for the sum of money appropriated. When the proposals are again invited other bidders may respond, whose figures will be within the proper bounds. It would be unfortunate, indeed, if it should develop that the remodeling of the male infirmary as planned can not be carried out for the money available, in which case the hospital would be deprived of an improvement, the need of which for years has handicapped the institution in its care and treatment of one class of the insane.

Foley's Orino Laxative is a new remedy, an improvement on the laxatives of former years, as it does not gripe or nauseate and is pleasant to take. It is guaranteed. Sold at Paules & Co's Pharmacy.

Grand Juries Are Useless.

One of the most remarkable arrangements of the uselessness of grand juries was made by Judge Savidge, of Northumberland county, specially presiding in Cambria county, last week. Attorneys and spectators heard him in open mouthed amazement.

Said the judge in his charge: "In my opinion, the grand jury is no longer needed in the courts of Pennsylvania. The courts can take care of defendants and see that they get justice. The higher courts will surely take care of them if the lower courts fail, and the board of pardons will surely be just. I regard the grand jury much as I would a fifth wheel on a buggy. By fifth wheel, I do not mean the half moon on the front axle. I mean an extra wheel on a four-wheeled vehicle. The wheel would be of no use. The grand jury in these days is of value only when it sees that the little, petty cases which ought not to come here, are not brought to trial. Gentlemen, I want you to be careful that you don't send anything to this court that you ought not to have. When you come to a case and find nothing in it throw it out. We have no time or money to waste on such matters. You serve the county, and are of some value when you get the poor fellows haled into court on petty charges, and the poor witnesses who are haled in the cases, and receive no costs, go back to their homes. In any case, the petty cases ought not to get here. It is your duty to see that they don't."

She complained of the great poet because of what seemed to be the untimely and causeless death of Cordelia the gentlest, the sweetest, the most divine of all of Shakespeare's women. It seemed to her that it was cruel to have Cordelia die. The master teacher reminded his pupil that one of our own poets has said, that the quick lightning and the pestilence have never been known to make nice discriminations, when let slip from God's right hand.

It is even so. But we fancy there were few people in Danville, who, when they heard of Mrs. J. B. Gearhart's death did not question destiny, even as that young woman did—wishing amid their questioning that this community might have held, if only for a little longer, one of the noblest souls and sweetest spirits it has ever known.

Nearly all of us love self. A great many love friends and family, and labor for them devotedly, unselfishly. Now and then there is one, who, like the dear God, "loveth all."

Mrs. Gearhart possessed in wonderful measure this beautiful spirit of love, which is the essence of brotherhood and sisterhood the wide world round. She did good deeds as naturally, and as unconsciously withal, as a flower gives its perfume to the air.

It is to be said of her, as it was said of Dorcas: "This woman was full of good works." Was there sickness within the sphere of her activity? She was there to minister. Was there sorrow in a home where she was known? She was there to comfort. Was there need anywhere within the circle, in which she moved? She was present to relieve it.

And she did all this without neglect of any household duty or obligation. Her sympathy was all embracing, and all who knew her, knew this through that unerring intuition, which makes us draw near, in perfect trust, to those who really love their fellowmen.

Her church was one of the objects of her continual solicitude. For it nothing was labor, or sacrifice. She possessed great ability for leadership and achievement. There are many who would do, but who can not accomplish that which they desire to do. Mrs. Gearhart was able to exercise leadership without ostentation or any show of authority.

Her family, her neighbors, her friends were never absent from her thought. Every grief and joy that was theirs was likewise hers. All her life she spared not herself, but gave freely and plead "His love for love."

There are no words that can do justice to such a life. The influence of such living is a wellspring of life eternal. Death closes the love-lit eyes, folds the ever ready hands, silences the tongue, that when it could not praise, was chained. But the fact that such a life has been lived in the sight of men, remains like a benediction to all who have ever known it. Mrs. Gearhart will ever be an inspiration and a sweet and gentle memory. **
