RESULTS FROM LITERATURE. "It is as plain as day that the farmer cannot be taught and made to employ tested methods of farming by means of literature," added Mr. Rose. 'No matter how great the desire for an insight into the better, more profitable methods, they get small satisfaction out of pamphlets and circulars that tell in high-sounding words the benefits to be derived. Take the coun- No. 4 coal, one for the court house and ty fair as an instance of this very thing. Farmers flock there for miles around simply to see the improved machinery always on exhibition. Often they make their purchases on the spot because they know exactly what they are buying.

"For years agricultural schools have been established, but the farmers' sons did not attend with the idea of staying on the plot of ground surrounding the old homestead. The trend has been cityward, but there has been a sudden change of the current here in the east within ten years.

FARM THE BEST MEANS.

"An experimental farm would answer the need of the agriculturist of today, especially in Pennsylvania. There the results of research in science could be put into practice, and tillers of the soil from miles around could become investigators and learn for themselves exactly how things are being done. Maybe they would be anxious to know the secret of alfalfa growing, and they could inspect the alfalfa field; if the corn crop had provalfalfa field; if the corn crop had prov-ed profitable they could discover ways William Forrester, Philip Forrester, of getting even better returns.
