PROTECTING DN THE GULLIBLE DR. IREY ON THE NEAR LYNCHING S. S. CONVENTION AT MILLERSBURG

Almost the entire able bodied mal population of Millersburg assisted Irving Smith in preventing the elopement of his wife on Monday night, and now that the excitement has quieted down to a certain extent it is conceded that the timely arrival of the Pennsylvania evening passenger train saved the town from a lynching.

Even as matters turned out, Samuel Mundorf, the man who was trying to take Mrs. Smith away, was given an old-fashioned ride on a rail and unmercifully beaten. Some one had produced a rope and cries of "lynch " and "hang him" were begin him, ning to arise when the train pulled into the station. Some of the cooler heads of the crowd rushed Mundorf over to it and hustled him aboard, with the injunction never to return if he valued his life.

Mundorf and Smith, are bakers, and Mundorf boarded with the Smith fami Mundorf, who is about forty-five years old recently became so attentive to Mrs. Smith that the suspicions of her husband were aroused and on Monday when he heard the woman caution Mundorf to be careful to put his glasses in his pocket, he decided to watch

He retired early in the evening, but crawled into bed with his clothes on and when he heard his wife leave the house he quietly slipped through a window and followed.

He came upon Mundorf and the woman and he asked her to return with him. She refused to do this saying that she was going away with Munthat she was going away with Alun-dorf and while Smith continued to plead with her the news of what was oing on got around and a crowd began to gather.

Just how it started no one seems to know but before long the crowd, by this time fully 300 strong including some of the best known business mer of the town, had Mundorf in charge and Smith was left to deal single handed with his wife. He took her

Things did not turn out quite s easily for her companion. In addition to the beating and ride on a rail that he got his clothing was badly torn and he was pretty thoroughly frightened.
