BUNCOMBE. OF

ORIGIN OF A MOST PECULIAR COLONY.

a Freed Slave and His White Sweetheart Beat the Law - Great Contempt of Their Descendants for Negroes who Were Freed by the Late War.

No account of the yellow belles of Buncombe would be complete without a short sketch of the illustrious revolu-tionary patriot, Col. Edward Buncombe, from whom they derive their name. He clonary patriot, Col. Edward Buncombe, from whom they derive their name. He was born of English parentage A. D. 1742. At the age of 25 he married and settled on the island of St. Kits. In 1768, with wife, child and slaves, he embarked for the Carolina coast, entered Hatteras, salled on up the Albemarie, landed at Mackey's creek, and purchased large tracts of land in the boundaries of the county of Tyrrel. Near the still waters of Mackey's he erected his famous residence, "Buncombe Hall." Over the gate at he entrance to the grounds of the manuscript was written this couplet:

Buncombe Hall.

Buncombe Hall,
Welcome all!
Which was true to the letter. The poor and unfortunate never went away empty, and his triends were always sumptuously entertained. At the breaking out of the revolution he raised a regiment, quartored it at 'Buncombe Hall,' equipped it at his individual expense, and when ready for serving he, at its had, gallantly fought in defense of the toonies until wounded at the battle of Bandywine. He was captured by the Bitish in that battle and carried to Fliladelphia where he died a prisoner of war in 173 at the early age of 37.

Among Col. Buncombe s saves was man named Charon, far above the average in intellect, appearance, and reliability. In fact, a mixture of European. Spanish, and African bloods coursed through his voins. He was a great favorite of the colonel's, and after the termination of the war was set free by the Bancombe family. Still, regarden as a negro with few of the rights and privileges of the white man, he was what they termed in those days a "free person" of color"—master of his own time toome and go when it suited him, on in many respects no better than a s ave. Charon mingled with the lower as of whites, and being naturally industried and caretaking, was regarded very favorably by the 'white trash, as an slaves called those who permitted him to visit their houses. The inseriourse some developed into a case of natural admiration and love between him and a consequent of them.

It seems that the lovers were not to be thwarted, for Charon gashed his ann and while the blood was flowing his weetheart placed her mouth upon the was necessary to prove or truthfull swear that the said party had mixed blood in them.

from them are directly descended "the yellow belles of Buncombe."

In those days land was very cheap in Carolina—selling in some instances alow as 25 cents per acre. Charon had saved $100 in the years since obtaining his freedom, and with it he purchased a tract of 400 acres, unbroken wilderness, situated some miles from any other inhabitants. It was there he moved his family and there his descendants dwell to this day. The country, in the meantime filled up and land became more valuable, so they are not so isolated now. Indeed, they form an interesting community in close proximity to a prosperous and weathly agricultural section.

For a century they have dwelt on this land, and multiplied until they number many dozen families. Regarded as negoes by the white people, yet in all then history not one has ever been known to marry a full-blooded negro. They mated only with mulattoes, quadroons and octoroons, so have perpetuated them mistory after the claim to be the ambitoracy of the negroes; and till this day look with contempt upon those who were freed by the late war, and speak of them as the "new issue." On the other hundry the old slaves regard them lighely. But the y-low belies of Buncombe are much more popular than their cassaer cousins. At festivans, plenes, e.e., where the two are frequently brought together, the attention shown the yellow girls is noticeable in a very marked degree—often to the entire neglect of the blacks. And that they are pretty no admirer of female loveliness will deny. They are mit and straight, with wearounded and spichdicity developed forms; and to see them tripping by two and there salong the secunce pathways of their community they app are as a tive and supple as the wild fawns of the neighboring corests. THE RULING PASSION.

That the ruling passion asserts itself even in the very face of the grim destroyer is an axiom as old as the hills. Its truth was evidenced by an-incident which recently occurred at the San Francisco city and county hospital, and which was related to a reporter.

Some months ago two consumptives in the last stages of the disease lay dying on cots in close proximity to each other. Both victims were sports, who by dissipation had contracted phthisis in its most aggravated form. One was known as Bill Cunningham, a young gambler who had enjoyed the reputation among his class of being a reckless bettor on the turn of a card. The other was an English sailor named Staples, whose sole passion was to wager whatever he possessed in support of any opinion which he might express. The naure of the men, in this particular at icast, was identical, and both recognized each other in a sense as brothers in misier. une. As they lay on their cots, haggard and hollow-eyed and gasping for breath, they daily wasted the remnant of their vital forces in bantering one another about their appearance.

"I say, Staples," said Cunningham one morning, in a voice scarcely above a hoarse whi-per, "you're looking blue. Better bine up, old man."

Staples, who really seemed to be a dead man as he lay almost breathless with his sidaz-d eyes half open and mouth widely distended, pulled himself togener with an indignant jerk and made an attempt to raise himself upon his arm.

"Billy." said he, "you're wrong. To prove it I'll bet you a dollar, the size of my pot, that I'll ontive ye."

"I'll see that bet," repiled Billy. An attendant was chosen as stakeholder and the money (all they possessed) was placed in his hands. Then began the struggle of these men to see who could retain the spark of life longest. At a distance of live feet the two dying men gianced at one another, each eager to show the other that hi stock of vitality was the greater. Cunningham battled bravely, but he was the first to show signs of weakening. He finally resumed his old posit

Scarcely live minutes had assed since Cunningham had expired, but when the attendant glanced at Staples he saw that he, too, was dead. The last pot which he had raked in was clasped in his right hand. Took Medicine in Water.

The Crookston, Minn., "Times" weaves a readable little romance about Uncle Tim Sullivan, ex-chairman of the county board, who runs a farm in the western part of the county. Uncle Tim is one of the most robust of western farmers, and although well advanced in years has never known a sick day up to a few days ago, when, feeling a little under the weather, he concluded to go to Grand Forks and consult a doctor. A prescription was compounded at a drug store and Uncle Tim was given a small vial with instruction to take a teaspoonful of the medicine in water, every three hours.

He took the medicine home, but his wife had gone out to visit a neighbor, so he concluded to take the first doss during her absence. A rain barrel filled with water stood at the corner of the house, and stripping off his clothes, Uncle Tim got into the water up to his chin, and was about to pour out a teaspoonful of the medicine when his wife returned.

"For goodness sake, father, what are you doing there?" she exclaimed as she saw his head at the top of the barrel.

"sone, I'm following the doctor's orders," said Tim. "He told me to take a teaspoonful of that medicine in water every three hours, and I'm just going to ake my first dose."

Airs. S. saw the joke, and it was too good to keep. She told the boys when freey came to supper, and Uncle Tim will sever hear the last of it.

"Well Phil, I have. Don't you remember the last time I saw you, how miserable I was? Sick and blue, and in that sort of mood a man gets sometimes when he feels the most noble thing in life is to go straight to the devil."

"Not so bad as that, I hope; at all events you didn't go that way, you are looking far too happy and hearty."

"Thank goodness, no! or rather, thank Yinegar Bitters. Do you remember that day I saw you last, when you recommended that remedy to me so persistently, and I was first vex d and then half convinced."

I remember it perfectly, and you needn't say another word upon the subject; your looks tell me that you took the medicine."

"I believe it is; in fact, I have heard so, and I wonder the McDonald Drug Company sell it for the same price they do the old style, because it is really a very costly preparation."
"Well, that dosn't concern us. Who was it said that people fancied themselves pious sometimes when they were only bilious? No matter! I was only going to say that I believe people often seem wicked when it is only their liver, or their stomach, or some other cantankerous organ of the body so out of order they couldn't be good if they tried."
