His eyes were closed and his alender hands folded across his breast when the grim messenger came. The expression upon his face is one of deflaree. His iron nerve lasted to the end. Fitz's mons had been fully identified and knowing that he would have to go back to the scene of his crime determined to seek liberty through death. He was being taken care of in the hospital department of the prison. After dressing he sat down at a table and wrote a letter which he placed in his pocket. Then he asked for a cigarette and when a nurse promised to go out and accure some paper, he went to a bed, threw himself on it and drew a blanket over his face. Those in the room heard him groaning, but believed him dreaming. About twenty minutes after Fitzsimmons had lain down Detective Murphy and a Fitzburg newspaper man came to the bed and pulled off the blanket. They were startled to see Fitzsimmons overed with blood and gasping. Assistance was sent for. An examination showed that the murderer had stable himself with a penknife three times in the left side and once on the right, the knife penetrating deeply. Pittsburg, Pa., February 6 .- Mrs. Fi'zsim mons was informed of her husband's attempt at suicide. Warden Wright, the mons was informed of her husband's attempt at sulcide. Warden Wright, the prison matron and an officer of the institu-tion visited her cell, and together performed the pitful task. She had not yet recovered the shock of her husband's capture. She sat up in bed, in her night dress, with a pale, nervous face and manner, to receive, her visitors. As gently as possible she was told to prepare for the worst, and then the grave fidings were broken to her as she braced herself, and with an effort said: "I can be brave if must." For the moment she seemed dazed, and then slid out of bed and samk upon her knees upon the floor of her cell. In that attitude she paryed aloud fervently and earnestly for the salvation of her husband's soul. Her face cleared as she prayed. She then recited the story of her husband's frime, his imprisonment, his escape and capture. She told how unfit he was to met his Maker, how careless he had been of him would be saved.
