

A CONVENIENT VELVET BODICE. A velvet bodice, made slightly open at the throat, with velvet sleeves also slightly open, is a most useful addition to a woman's wardrobe. Net or lace sleeves set in full below the velvet sleeve can be changed at will to match various styles and tints of neckdressing. Lace or folds of chiffon or net are lightly ar-ranged to outline the opening of the throat. Crossed folds of creps de chine can also be used to raise the bodice front to any desired height, while the dressy appearance of the V outline yet remains. —St. Louis Republic.

LITTLE FOLKS' FASHIONS.

Children's cambric dresses are made in simple styles which may be easily laun-dried. A little more embroidery is used than last season. Very frequently a full ruffle of the dress material, about four inches deep finishes the neck of blouse dresses. Black velvet sashes of ribbon about two unches wide are used on small dresses. Black velves sames of riobon about two inches wide are used on small children's dresses, and they often begin on the shoulder, go down to the waist line, where they cross directly in front and pass around to the back where they are tied in a bow, with ends.—Atlanta (Ga. It will seem strange to the readers of history half a century hence to learn that women were excluded from the profes-sions of the country until even after the noon-tide of the Nineteenth Century, for there is little reason to doubt that in much less than half a century women physicians will fairly divide the medical practice with their professional brethern, and men physicians, in the many cases in which every consideration of delicacy should prefer a women physician, will be quite as uncommon as women were generations ago. —Philadelphia Times.

FASHION NOTES.

Mantles are made in the visite form, and are of fine cloth in light brown, electric blue or terra cotta.

Hats are a mass of flowers these days, and the art of imitating nature is fruit-ful of most charming results.

Short sleeves have again returned for dinner and theatre toilettes. Sometimes lace is ruffled at the top of the gloves, and often gold bracelets set with prec-ious stones are worn on the arms.

One of the most distinguished and stylish costumes of the season is a lus-trous black silk gown,jet trimmed, with tan parasol, tan suede gloves and tan-colored velvet "calf leather" shoes.
