PRESIDENTIAL BATTLES.

THE STORY OF A CENTURY'S NA-TIONAL CAMPAIGNS.

Bit of Political History That is Espe cially Interesting Just Now. Factors That Have Figured in President Making.

The Philadelphia Times of last Sunday gave up one of its pages to "a record of a century of National contests," and from that is condensed what follows:

century of National contests," and from that is condensed what follows:

Nominating conventions were unknown at the time of the organization of the Republic, and at the first election of President no candidate had been presented by any party. It was accepted by common consent that Washington should be President, and as John Adams was pre-minently the representative man of New England in the struggle for independence, he was chosen Vice President. Only 10 of the original States participated in the first Presidential election. Before the end of Washington's first term Vermont and Kentucky had been admitted into the Union, and the whole 15 States voted at his second election. Washington again received the unanimous vote, being 132, and Adam received 77, which made him Vice President for the second term.

In the middle of Washington's second term parties began to form, and at the beginning of 1794 Jefferson resigned his place as Secretary of State and took the leadership of the Republican party, in opposition to the policy of the Administration, which became known as Federalist. There was then no direct vote for Vice President; each Elector voted for two men for Presicent, the one receiving the highest became Vice President. In this way John Adams, Federalist, was elected President, and Thomas Jefferson. Republican, was elected Vice President. The alien and sedition laws of the Adams administration further widened the breach between Republicanism and Federalism.

In 1800 Adam and Jefferson were again pitted again each other. Charless C. Piccole.

and the breach between Republicanism and Federalism. In 1809 Adam and Jefferson were again bitted again each other, Charles C. Pinckney being the running mate with Adams, and Aaron Burr with Jefferson. There was no election by the people and the contest sent into the House, where, after a long truggle, in which Burr-tried to win the Presidency, Jefferson was finally elected. February 25, 1804, the first formal nomination to the Presidency was made by a longressional cartous, and Jefferson was made south and the sent and the was re-elected by an overwhelming major-typic color of the presidency of the property of the battle against him from the start, and he was re-elected by an overwhelming majority, receiving 162 electoral votes to 14 for Pinckney.

In 1805 the only rivalry was between the two Virginians, Madison and Monroe, and Madison won the nomination on the first ballot. The Federalists maile no formal nomination against him, but by general consent presented their old ticket of Pinckney and King. The campaign of 1838 did not rise to the dignity of a contest, and Madison was elected by 122 electoral votes to 47 for Finckney. The election of 1812 occurred did was elected by 122 electoral votes to 47 for Finckney. The election of 1812 occurred did not rise to the dignity of a contest, and Madison was elected by 122 electoral votes to 47 for Finckney. The election of 1812 occurred did not rise to the dignity of a contest, and Madison was elected without difficulty, the Federalist party having suffered by the hostility of its leaders of the war.

With the end of the war there was an end of the Federalist party. March 16, 1816, Monroe was nominated against Crawford. The disappointment of the Crawford followers led to an outburst against the Congressional caucus, and in Baltimore and several other places public meetings were held protesting against the arbitrary power of Congressional caucus, and in Baltimore and several united in the support of Monroe, who received 182 of the 217 Electoral votes.

At the end of Monroe's term came the era of good feeling, and there was no opposition to his re-election. He would have received every electoral vote but for a New Hampshire elector, who said that honor should be reserved for Washington only, and seast his vote for John Quincy Adams.

But 1 a 1824 opposition to the Congressional caucus system was renewed, with the result that Crawford, Jackson, Clay and Arians were candidates, and that the contest was again thrown into the House contest, as only the error of the four candidates can be presented there.

In 1825 Jackson was seen and fought his advourmed until Seutember 28. 1831 whe

In 1848 the Whips at Philadelphta nominated Zachary Taylor, and the Democrats at Baltimore Lewis Cass. Taylor died in 1850 and Fillmore became the second accidential President. During Fillmore's time the fugitive slave law was passed and the Whig party was disrupted.

In 1852 the Whigs at Baltimore nominated General Scota, the Democrats in the same city nominated Pierces, and the Free Soil Democracy in Pittsburgh nominated John P. Hale. Pierce had things pretty much his own way.

The first Republican National convention was held in Philadelphia in 1856, which nominated Freemont. The National Council of Americans had previously in the same city nominated Bilmore. The Democrats at Cincinnati nominated Buchanan, who was to see the beginning of the civil war under his administration.

Then comes the familiar story of Lincoln and Johnson, and after them the nomination of Grant at Chicago in 1868, his election and re-election; the election of Hayes; then of Garfield his assassination and the administration of Arthur as the third accidental president; the election of Hayes; then of Harrison. Eight ballots were required to nominate Mr. Harrison.

Extraordinary Increase of Cases and Enormous Sums Paid.

Green B. Raum, persion commissioner, has just issued a report wherein are contained statistics showing the number of pensioners and the sums paid to them during the II months from July 1, 1894, to May 31, 1892, and other data, as below:

The number of pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1891, was 676,160. This was increased during the II months stated to 856, 687, an increase of 179,927. This was duelargely to the liberal act of June, 1890, there being in that time granted 207, 255 criginal-cases, 71,265 increases and 983 restorations. The average first payment now is $138–25. Last year! twas $173–70.

There is still one pension paid on account of the Revolutionary war. It is to a widow and was reissued. She gets now $30 monthly. A single survivor of the war of 1812 gets $30 a month, an increase of $22. Thirty widows of the same war draw monthly $336. Army pensions outnumber those paid to marines on the ratio of 10 to 6 under the new law, and of 11 to 7 under the general law.

Baltimore, Md., discharged Charles H. Mc-Allister, who was arrested under the Maryland law for selling oleomargarine, the courtholding that the arrest was illegal. In his opinion Judge Bond said:

"A State may regulate the sale and storage of articled angerous to the health of the city but it cannot prohibit the importation. The laws of the United States recognize oleomargarine as a mercantile article. Being such, while a State may perhaps regulate its sale, it cannot prohibit its importation. The statue in question does this, and is unconstitutional in this respect and void."
