TOPICS And COMMENT.

ONE key is always dangerous to use in political deadlocks—whiskey. See?

"SENATOR-ELECT" is in the eyes of a number of gentlemen a decided improvement upon "Senator-expectant."

THAT Colorado gold find seems to be closely related to the average ante-election political find—it fails to pan out when the returns arrive.

It begins to look as though it would be necessary to have two World's Fairs, one open on Sunday and one closed on Sunday, in order to prevent a boycott.

PEOPLE who give presents to newly-elected officials may do so from pure, good will, but there are always people who believe they do it either for advertising or for office.

THE young carpenter who while at work in the house of a Wall street broker persuaded the broker's daughter to run away with and marry him, is evidently a joiner as well as a carpenter.

If a Congressional committee is to be appointed to investigate the whisky trust, pray let it be impressed upon the minds of its members that it is the trust and not the whisky that is to be investigated.

PENNSYLVANIA, it is said, leads every other state in World's Fair work and will have a better exhibit than any other state. Even its agricultural exhibit, it is claimed, will be the best at the great fair. This is the best all-around state in the Union.

MISS SUSAN B. ANTHONY believes that America is "on the verge of an era of unmarried women, because young men do not earn enough money to support their wives, and there is such a craze for dissipation among them that the women would rather go into a store for almost nothing than to marry."

A MAN at West Salem, O., has been indicted for wearing a G. A. R. button without being a member of that organization. It will be news to many that it is illegal in some states to display the insignia of certain orders unless authorized to do so by actual membership, but such is the case. Pennsylvania has such a law.—Ex.

A CHICAGO detective, who says he has worked for two years on the Snell murder case, declares that W. B. Tascott is not the murderer of Millionaire Snell. The detective claims that the real murderer is now in Chicago and has been there ever since the murder; that he is wealthy and has paid Tascott a fortune to play the scape-goat. A miner who has just returned from Alaska says he saw and talked with Tascott at different points in Alaska.—Ex.

EVERY Christmas for the last twelve years, M. P. Heckerman has visited the Bedford county poor house, with a kind word and a gift of some sort for each one who is so unfortunate as to be compelled to make that place his home. A man like Mr. Heckerman is far greater and far happier than a whole regiment of Gouls, Vanderbilts, et al. Being kind to the unfortunate is a great religion within itself. The man who lacks this quality, will never get to heaven, no matter how pious he is in other respects.

It has been truly said that silent suffering is a thing often unknown to the world; for there is much pain that is quite noiseless, and vibrations that make human agonies are often mere whispers in the roar of hurrying existence. There are glances of hatred that stab and raise no cry of murder; robberies that leave men and women forever beggared of peace and joy, but that are kept secret by the sufferer—committed to no sounds except low moans in the night—seen in no writing except that done on the face by the slow months of suppressed anguish and early morning tears. Many an inherited sorrow that has marred a life has been breathed into no human ear.—Hebron (Neb.) Journal.

An exchange says some Chicago newspaper reporters recently dropped five pocket-books in five public places, then watched to see what the finders would do with them. Of the five lucky finders one was a dude, another a barber, the third a fashionably-dressed woman, the fourth a printer, and the fifth a woman who rides in her own coupe, with silver ornaments on the harness of the big bay horse hitched to it. The barber was the only one of the five to inquire for the owner of the wallet.

Does this indicate that four out of every five people are dishonest, or that barbers are the only honest class? As for the printer, there is no doubt that he was honest enough to return it, but his poverty wouldn't allow it.

SUGGESTIONS for Congressional mottoes: Henry Lodge—Give me exclusiveness or give me death; Buck Kilgore—Open the door, or I'll kick it down; Jerry Simpson—Suck me into the Senate; Senator Washburne—Less gambling, more prosperity; Senator Mills—Hogs are not needed at Washington; ex-Speaker Reed—Temporary crowns are n. g.; Bailey, of Texas—No work, no pay (in public); Speaker Crisp—Uneasy is the neck that wears an ill-fitting collar; Senator Teller—No music is as sweet as the jingle of silver; Senator Carlisle—Deliver us from temptation; Senator Hill—What's in a name, so long as it wins? Representative Holman—The less you spend the more you'll have; Representative Hoar—Tears, vain tears; Springer, of Illinois—Don't strike a man when he's down.

THE Alexandria (Neb.) Herald makes the following declaration, which is a fair and manly statement of the wrongs inflicted on Newspaper publishers:

We have, after mature deliberation, concluded to charge for all church and society entertainment notices at our regular rates. Extensive marriage and obituary notices, cards of thanks, and resolutions of condolence and respect are all right in their places, and will be taken at our advertising rates. Our space is our money, and we can contribute our money as gracefully as anybody, if we can only get the cash. But too many think we have to print something, and can print their wishes as cheaply as anything else, and forget that it perhaps more particularly interests them than anyone else. After giving from ten cents to five dollars worth of space to the subject, editors are expected to pay the same as those who have done nothing.

THE editor of the Oregon Resources, recently established at Portland, Oregon, makes the following salutory: It evidently "comes from the heart," and a part of it, at least, is the honest conviction of many newspaper men. He says: "I am running this paper all by my lonesome. I am thoroughly satisfied with it. Typographically, I call it neat. Editorially, it is a question of taste. This valuable paper is started to fill a long-felt want—by the editor—for more cash. It will be devoted to the welfare of the editor first, to Portland next, and the manufacturers and industries of Oregon. I don't care a continental whether you advertise or not. I am going to set my own type, pay for my press work and paper, and enjoy the privilege of saying just what I please, and those not admiring the style of the long felt want needn't ante. This paper has come to stay as long as it pays. When the little dollars cease to tinkle it will quietly turn up its tiny toes and be buried in the Oregonian graveyard."

HERE is a bit of information that contains a great deal of food for reflection. Read it carefully and ponder over it. If it is of no importance to you, we will guarantee that it will do you no harm. We do not remember the story word for word, but it runs something like this:

A certain man recently died in a work house, in St. Joseph, Mo., and was buried in the paupers' corner of the graveyard. This man had a name, but he requested the newspapers to speak of him only as "a certain man." It is said by some of them who knew him that five years ago there wasn't a young fellow in all Missouri with a brighter future before him than this certain man. He was happily married, had a good position with a large salary, and his talents in certain directions were so pronounced that it was freely predicted that he would be famous some day. The story of his downfall would be a long one, but his own dying request explains it all. He said: "Erect a cheap headstone for me, if you please, and inscribe thereon these words: 'Here lies a man who could drink or let it alone.'"

This certain man drank until the lid of his untripped, unpanicked pine coffin was nailed down, then he let it alone. He closed his bleared eyes in a work house and was fled away in a misfit grave; and there wasn't a soul left to mourn him when a hired man carelessly shoveled the cold clods upon his coffin.

Whisky is a dangerous thing for most men to fool with. On first acquaintance it is a genial, mirth-provoking companion, but when it takes its place as master, it is the chief of all tyrants. It heeds not the poor slave's plea to be relinquished from its grasp nor his resolutions to let it alone, but it attacks him through his craving appetite and too often maintains its mastery over him. It is true that there are really men who can drink or let it alone, but you seldom hear them speak of it. Those who usually make that assertion seldom let it alone until they die, as was the case with this certain man.

Statistics of statesmen.
