R. J. BEATTY FOUND GUILTY

A SPEEDY VERDICT GIVEN.

The Jury Takes But Nine Minutes to Find Him Guilty of Poisoning. Judge Stowe's Charge to the Jury.

A verdict of guilty as indicted was rendered at Pittsburg in the case of R. J. Beatty, charged with poisoning the non-union workmen at Homestead. The jury was out a very short time. It was nine minutes from the time they entered their room until they reported their verdict ready. This is accounted for principally by the fact that the evidence was all in and the addresses were made the day before, so that the jurors had all night to think about their verdict.

The effect upon Beatty was pitiful to see. He started as though he had received an electric shock, then his lower jaw dropped and his muscles relaxed. His arms fell to his side and he showed plainly that he had been dealt a terrible blow. There was perfect silence, all eyes were turned on him. At a sign from Judge Stowe his keeper tapped him on the shoulder and beckoned him to follow. Beatty started as the hand touched him. He uttered a heavy sigh and slowly followed his leader to his cell.

The attorneys for the Commonwealth say that for the counts on which Beatty was found guilty it is legal for the Court to sentence him to 25 years in the penitentiary. Attorney Evener was asked what his defense would do now, and replied that nothing had been decided upon.

Judge Stowe in his charge said: "You will recall that there are two distinct and separate charges made in different ways in regard to means and result—one of attempting to murder and injure Griffith the other of attempting to murder and act in injury to others. Griffith unknown to the grand jury. Upon their indictment if the jury believe the poison was the means used, and the defendant is guilty of using it with intent to injure and sicken any person comprehended within the indictment, that is to say W. E. Griffith or others then unknown to the grand jury, then your verdict must be in that charge, alleging the use of poison and it will be unnecessary to direct your attention to the other counts merely alleging the intent without reference to the means used to commit murder, do great bodily harm to W. E. Griffith and others, for the reason that the charge of poisoning includes the other charges. And if the defendant is guilty of the former, it necessarily involves the latter. The whole evidence seems to me to point to the use of poison if anything was used to sicken the workmen by the defendant, and if that was not used I think the jury should acquit. But if poison was used, as alleged by the Commonwealth, and Griffith was injured by taking it, under the circumstances he states, whoever was intentionally instrumental in administering or having administered to him the guilty of the felony charged in the indictment, legally involving the intent to murder, although such persons may not have actually intended to injure Griffith in particular nor to take his life. When one administers poison with intent to injure and sicken another, and such person dies from the effect of the injury it is murder, at least of the second degree, under our statute, although it may be apparent that his intent was actually not to take life.

So it is when one person prepares to kill or injure another and in pursuance of such original design, accidentally given to the wrong person, then he must inquire into what is meant by poison under the statute. The satisfactory definition I find is "a substance that has an inherent deleterious property, which renders it when taken into the system in small doses capable of destroying life or deleteriously acting on the body when taken in small doses."

"The testimony in this case, so far as it tends to show that any substance was used to sicken and injure the parties to whom it was administered points so strongly to poisoning of some kind, that it seems to me as before stated that the jury will probably have no trouble in concluding from the evidence that if any deleterious substance by the authority or connivance of defendant acted in a poisonous character in the proper and legal sense of the term 'poison.'"

"The jury will readily remember the evidence which tends to show the character of the powders claimed to have been used without reference to it by me."

Judge Stowe then went over in detail the meaning of all the counts and instructed the jury how to convict on certain counts, if they did not wish to convict on all. He also reviewed in detail the evidence of Gallagher and Davidson, showing in what points they were corroborated. In showing this the court says:

We may say here both Dempsey and Beatty corroborate Gallagher in respect to his employment to secure persons for purposes other than cooks were ordinarily employed for by the managers of the works. But here it is where the difference arises, where the guilt or innocence of Beatty under this indictment depends. Whether you give credit to the story of Gallagher, and Davidson as to his connection with the offenses alleged to have been committed by putting these powders to be used at the mill. The evidence of Beatty and Dempsey, while corroborating Gallagher thus, differs radically as to what the purpose was. If, as assigned by Dempsey, it was simply to play the spy upon the works and to find out for his own purpose what was going on there, whatever we may think of such business, it certainly will not justify the conviction of Beatty, even if Gallagher, as he himself says, administered some injurious substance in the food in the mill. But this question must be determined by all the evidence in the case.

Continuing, the judge said: "If Gallagher's story is corroborated in any material respect, such as induces you to rely upon and give it credit, you should act upon it accordingly. Indeed if it comes in such shape as carries conviction to your minds, beyond a reasonable doubt, you should not discard it simply because it is the testimony of an accomplice, but give it proper consideration in making up your verdict."

CROPS PROMISE WELL.

The Snow Has Protected Winter Grain from Being Frost-Bitten.

The winter crop report of the Agricultural Bureau says the grain crops as a rule have not been injured by the cold weather, the snow protecting them from being frost-bitten.

Over the northern section of Pennsylvania snow has covered the ground to a depth sufficient to afford protection, and the severe winter has not unfavorably affected wheat. In the eastern section favorable conditions are reported.

In Ohio winter wheat and other growing crops as a whole, have stood the winter well and are in good condition.

UNCLE SAM NOT ASLEEP.

He Leads Military-Ridden Europe in the Manufacture of Explosives.

While the United States Government holds aloof from foreign contentions and marches steadily onward on the road of prosperity, without a thought of standing armies, it is interesting to note that it is alive to preparations for defense in time of war, and has modestly followed out that idea to complete success in at least one particular. The European powers have been far ahead of us in the manufacture of gunpowder and gun cotton, particularly of smokeless powder, which in warfare promises to be of great utility on account of its durability, lightness and power. But they will be much surprised to learn that Uncle Sam is in possession of their secrets and has greatly improved upon them. A little over two years ago, by direction of the War Department, Prof. Charles E. Monroe, chemist at the torpedo station at Newport, R. I., began experiments in gun cotton, and as a result the Dupont Powder Company has a thoroughly equipped plant at Wilmington, Del., for the manufacture of the cotton, which is the basis of smokeless powder. That this is not a mere experiment is proved by the fact that 20,000 pounds of gun cotton have recently been received at Newport from Wilmington. Both the cotton and the smokeless powder are claimed to be far superior to the European articles, besides, are manufactured much cheaper. Experiments prove that the powder is most satisfactory for small bore and revolving and rapid fire guns up to what are known as six-poungers. It is more stable than any used abroad. The powder is not suitable for use in muskets, but this is a possibility of the future. To a large extent it is now used on our war vessels and is adapted to the main and secondary batteries. Greater perfection will come in time.

Enrol of Officers.
Alluding to one or two conspicuous recent instances, the New York World says:

Neither neuralgia nor drink nor insanity nor debt is necessary to make a United States army officer feel like committing suicide. Slow promotion and lack of occupation causes many an ambitious man to occasionally wonder if life is worth living. Nevertheless very few undertake to decide practically that it is not.

Nothing is easier to demonstrate than that men who are worth anything at all must sometimes vary either their employment or their enjoyment. The profession of arms opens up the most glorious possibilities in times of war, especially in the service of a nation which is as well calculated to take care of itself as the United States. But it may prove exceedingly lonesome as it is certainly monotonous in times of peace in a country like this, where the arts of peace are always to the fore, except in the very heat of conflict.

In Germany, on the contrary, these hypochondriacs would be the jolliest of fellows, having men whom they could command almost absolutely and having for their imperial master a young fellow who may not correctly understand the first principles of campaigning, but who loves military reviews better than he loves even the empress and his children, and almost as well as he loves his all-important self.

In other armies in Europe also the jaded, lonesome American officer turned European could reflect that millions were toiling and delving for him. Here he sees hundreds of thousands coining money and getting cartloads of enjoyment while he lives off of revolvers and taps. But, save for the few thus inconvenienced, it is all right. A commercial nation, easily mobilizable, does not need to imitate tottering despotism in turning its brave officers and men into mere janitorials.

The Bee's Use for His Sting.

It will be a surprise to many to learn that, after all, the most important function of the bee's sting is not stinging. I have long been convinced that the bees put the finishing touches on their artistic cell work by the dexterous use of their stings, and during this final stage of the process of honey-making the bees inject a minute portion of formic acid into the honey. This is really the poison of their sting. The formic acid gives to honey its peculiar flavor and also imparts to it its keeping qualities. The sting is really an exquisitely contrived little tool, with which the bee finishes off and caps the cells when they are filled brimful with honey. While doing this the formic acid passes from the poison bag, exudes, drop by drop, from the point of the sting, and the beautiful work is finished.—Horticultural Times.

"About ten years ago I contracted a severe case of blood poisoning. Leading physicians prescribed medicine after medicine, which I took without any relief. I also tried mercurial and potash remedies, with unsuccessful results, but which brought on an attack of mercurial rheumatism that made my life one of agony. After suffering four years I gave up all remedies and began using S. S. S. After taking several bottles I was entirely cured and able to resume work. It is the greatest medicine for blood poisoning to-day on the market."
