THE ART OF MAKE UP.

Some of the Expedients by Which Dramatic Effect is Heightened.

A face, if you please, though it bring a droil expression into the world with it, can become the exponent of tragedy through the powerful aid of a bit of chalk.

You inherit it materially, or perhaps nature fell out with the family likeness when it gave you an arching eyebrow. Such a feature produces a bland, "I'm-just-comme-earth" expression, indicative of a belief in everything from a nickel in the slot to a green goods speculation.

Your nose may be timid and retiring, desiring to seclude itself among the cushions of your cheeks. Lo, ye, it suddenly stands forth a nez such as Napoleon would have had marray into his family immediately and have given a kingdom for its removal.

Little Ida Mulle, of the "All Babs" Company, looks on the stage like a French wax doll. She says that she sees no more harm in a woman using paint and powder than in her wearing false hair, false teeth or a bustle.

The admirers of crinoline will be proud to learn that the invention of balloons is owing to a similar contrivance. The French give a curious anecdote of a simple occurrence which led the inventor of such machines—Montgolfier—to turn his attention to the subject.

"How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and the scorners delight in their scorn, and fools hate knowledge?" Simple ones, if they believe the devil, are easily led aright. If they go astray, they are soon among the scorners and the fools.

"I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh." Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap, and he that sows to the flesh, shall also reap corruption.

"When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you..."

"For that they hated knowledge, and despised his counsel; therefore shall they perish, and will not be in their graves." "For that they despised his counsel, and despised his voice; therefore shall they perish, and will not be in their graves."

"I would not detract one star from the crown of Gen. Sheridan's military glory, or cast one reflection on his ability as a commander. For I know from my own personal knowledge of him that he was one of the ablest commanders we had in the service..."

SOLDIERS' COLUMN

BATTLE OF CEDAR CREEK.

A Comrade Claims that Custer did More than Anybody to Save the Day.

THIS battle was fought Oct. 19, 1864. Gen. Sheridan was in command of the Army of the Shenandoah at that time, but on this particular day he was absent from his command on business, which was no fault of his. Whether the rebels knew he was absent or not I cannot tell; if they did, no doubt they selected that opportunity to make the attack, for they would be more likely to do that than to wait for us to get ready.

Speaking of getting ready puts me in mind of an incident that took place in Chuanquo County, N. Y., near where I reside, during the war. Allow me to digress a moment from the line of thought I have in mind to relate the incident. Two neighbors, both of whom were natives of the Emerald Isle (and it was said, were not particularly in sympathy with the Union cause) were in the habit of meeting after a battle had been fought and talking over the result, rejoicing or feeling sad, according to what it had been. At the time of which I speak there had been another battle, gained by the Union forces and, as usual, one of the good old neighbors called on the other and, after the usual salutation, said: "Well, Mr. Jones, has been done by our boys and the Confederate army has been fairly beaten; but, said he, 'there was nothing far about it, for the Yankees attacked before they got their breakfast done.'"

Now, my object in writing this is not so much to give a description of that terrible day's fight, for that has been done by the historian long ago, but I have ever felt that the credit of that day's battle was never given to the man who did more to bring about the happy result than anyone who participated in the great struggle. It will be remembered the attack was made in the early dawn, when our men were slumbering in their tents, and they had no opportunity to form in line, or to make any defense whatever. And the result was a general stampede of the whole army, which fell back in disorder and confusion. Now, something must be done to cause a reaction of this state of affairs, or the day was lost; and, mark me, as I have before stated, this was early morn and the odds were 20 miles away, and, as a matter of course, he could not be of any benefit to that struggling, disorganized, routed army. As I said in the start, it was no fault of his that he was not there.

Fortunately for the Union forces, Gen. George A. Custer (whose tragic fate we all lament) commanding the Third Cavalry Division, which the writer had the honor to be a member, was encamped on the extreme left and the moment his well-trained ears caught the sound of musketry, and the roar of artillery, his headquarters bugle rang out. "Boots and saddles!" which means saddle up in haste, and almost simultaneously came the order (which every cavalryman will understand): "Lead On!—Prepare to Mount—Mount—By Fours Forward March, and in less time than it takes to relate it, his division, with drawn sabers, were on the move.
