THE VENICE OF SIAM.
Bangkok is only one hundred years old, but it has over half a million of inhabitants. It has grown very rapidly, and is the largest town between Calcutta and Canton. It is surrounded by walls and canals. The town proper is on the left bank of the Menam, but vast suburbs prolong Bangkok to the right bank.
Canals traverse the city in all di- rections. It is only within the last few years that streets like those of Europe have been made along the river and in the vicinity. Neverthe- less, the transit through the city is by water.
From a distance "The Venice of Siam"—which is larger and more elaborate than that of Italy—presents a most picturesque appearance. Vast pyramidal pagodas rise above the waters and the ships and the trees, em- bellished with mosaics which glim- mer like gold in the sun.
Houses of European construction are built on terra firma near the port. The royal palace is one of these, and is a fine edifice in the Italian style.
The native houses are nearly all sculptured and ornamented with pic- tures and leaves of gold. They are the banks on both sides the Menam.
The legations and consulates—off which the French gunboats lie—are a little below Bangkok Kolem. Half the population of Bangkok consists of Chinese.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Not Taking Any Chances.
A certain judge in Chicago, who rather prides himself on his vast and varied knowledge of law, was com- pelled not long ago to listen to a case that had been appealed from a Justice of the Peace. The young practitioner who appeared for the appellant was long and tedious; he brought in all the elementary text-books and quoted the fundamental propositions of law. At last, the judge thought it was time to make an effort to hurry him up. "Can't we assume," he said, blandly, "that the court knows a little law it- self?"
"That's the very mistake I made in the lower court," answered the young man; "I don't want to let it defeat me twice."—Argonaut.

How Is It Used.
A country town in one of our Mid- dle States, in which is a sectarian college, was startled by the suicide of one of the college students. He had become a confirmed drunkard; and enfeebled in mind and body; conscious that his career in college was over, afraid to go home, in despair he sought death.
His brother was sent for to take the dead boy home. He found the President of the college, and said to him: "My mother three years or more ago sent you her youngest son, her Benjamin. He was a healthy, honor- able boy, who, when he left home, had never touched a drop of liquor. There is nothing to carry back to her but this poor diseased body. Who has done this? Who is guilty?"
"The venerable president was deeply moved. "Not I," he said. "The faculty were interested in him. When he began to go astray they remon- strated with him. I pleaded with him. Every influence that we could exert was brought to bear. But he went down as if drawn by some invisible hand."
"Whose was this hand?"
"As the dead boy was carried down the street, a pretty young girl looked out of a window of her home, and saw the hearse. She remembered how, nearly three years ago, vexed at his blindness to her charms and his eager- ness for study, she had used a her little wiles to attract him; how she had succeeded; how mad he was in his admiration of her.
There was a club in the college composed of students of free social habits. At their late supper wines were used, and stakes were played for at their card tables. She had urged him to join the club, and had praised their "manly" ways; their freedom from boyish restraints. "They were men of the world; she never could care for any man who had not seen life."
He had joined the club, and this was the result.
The silly, frivolous girl gave a sigh, and then laughed nervously. It was a pity! She had lost an admirer. But what could she do? No! she knew their men of the world who would not be driven to suicide by a few glasses of liquor!
She went on her foolish, cruel way. This is a true story, stripped of its worst details. In every college town there are young girls whose influence, unfortunately, is stronger over the students than that of their wisest and dearest friends. How do they use it?—Youth's Companion.

Libby Prison in 1865.
"I have been a sufferer from chronic diarrhoea ever since I came out of Libby Prison in 1865, and at times it was very severe, and my last ones of it lasted me over six weeks, during which time I tried all the remedies I had heard of, and several doctors treated me for the same, but nothing would stop it. "Watch stopped, has it?" asked one traveler of another. "Now, I suppose you'll pay a dollar to clean it. But let me give you a tip. Open both of the back cases so, hold it with open side down and tap it with your finger-nail a dozen times. Don't be afraid. Snap it again. Now move the second hand. Is it all right? I thought so. A drummer put me up to that trick. Probably there were only a few specks of dust in the works and you've rapped them out. Very likely it will now run for a year and you've saved your dollar. If it doesn't run after the little jar that you gave it, then it is time to take it to the jeweler."

When Animals Are Removed.
When animals or plants are re- moved from their peculiar and natural districts to one entirely different in climate some surprising changes take place. As soon as possible after such removal they change their character and habits so as to conform with their new homes, or else cease to exist. A good wool-bearing sheep trans- ferred from some northern pasture to the tropics changes his coat to a thin covering of straggling hairs scarcely resembling wool; the dog be- comes destitute of hair altogether, and even bees cease to lay up their stores of honey and in a great meas- ure lose their industrious habits.—St. Louis Republic.
