THE new Prussian Minister of Public Worship has announced in a circular that children whose parents have no religious faith need not receive religious instruc-tion in the public schools above the Primary grades, except at the request of their parents. This is a remarkable con-cession to the Radical and Free-thinking element, when we consider that it is made by a government which recognizes the desirability of religious training in the making of citizens and provides for it in the public schools. Either teaching children responsibility to a Supreme be ing helps to make better citizens of them or else it doesn't. If it does, it is wisdom for the state to provide such teaching. The free thinkers must have grown mighty in votes to force such a conces sion to parental authority as this from : government which more than almost any other counts its citizens not so much as individuals, but as the component atoms of a state.-Pittsburg Times
