A thight on the Loneymoon. The slush in Fulton street was ankle-deep, but they didn't seem to notice it. It was raining with all the ingenuity of a March storm, but they had no umbrelia, and as they stood arm-in-arm at Broadway and Fulton streets, they looked as if they had been married about ten minutes. He was a thin young man, with a brown derby hat and a slightly troubled look. She was young and proty, and she wore a pair of white kid shoes, and a lig white hat with wink roses all over it and she was too h npy to think of the weath r. "Oh, William," she whispered, as she nestled closer to the thin young man, "iss.'t it glorious to be alone together, darling, in a great city?" The thin young man made no re-ply. The rainwater was dripping from his brown derby—like medicine out of a patent dropper. "All alone," site continued, gazing bissfully at the tower on the West-ern Union Building, and, getting a firmer grip on the thin young man's right arm, "home and friends far away, and though the multitude is surging around us, we two are a one together, dearest, and its me and you against the world; ain't it. William?" William made no response. He shook some of the rainwater off his brown soggy derby, and then he said; "Let's go back to the hotel, Martha, and set down. If we was lied up like in the rain, I wouldn't mind. Buit there's a holse aire, and I tell you, Martha, this sort of thing is someezin' the honeymone." Swearing a Cause for Thanks.
