

A LITTLE WHILE.

It is so natural that we fall asleep Like tired children when the day is done.

KENNEDY.

BY ANNABEL DWIGHT.

A pretty cove making in from the ocean, a strip of white sand and some tall, gray cliffs for a background;

Kennedy was dark and handsome, of magnificent build, and had a decidedly picturesque look.

Beatrice, who was his art student, looked at him approvingly with her great, clear, innocent eyes.

"Very well," she returned, in calm unconsciousness, "the handsome skipper had presumed to admire her."

"Your love, Miss Beatrice?" he said, imperturbably.

Among the party there were one or two who would be lovers of the girl, and would be glad to see her.

"You must not call me Miss Bee," the girl corrected, haughtily.

"Turning his eyes once more upon her, he saw that she was trembling, and that she seemed powerless to move.

the ready response, "Kennedy is the son of old Lady Kennedy, down at Birch Landing, two miles below our place."

There were no more cozy chats with Kennedy. Beatrice was angry with herself for having been so friendly.

At last, when they were nearing home, came a terrible gale, when the heavens were black above them.

You can always smell a "dead one." He has a costive-looking face. His breath knocks you down. He drags his feet. Listeners to his talk turn their heads the other way. His breath poisons God's pure air. He ought to keep clean inside;—that means sweet breath, quick brain, swift moving feet.
