THE SCULL RING MUG.

How It Changed Expression at Various Stages of the Late Political Game.

Three weeks before the election when the Scull gang felt sure of victory.

Last week of the campaign, when matters were looking a little "spicious" to the Scullions.

It showed surprise when "Polly Gindlesperger" (Ed. Werner, Democrat) was not permitted to vote.

It showed all signs of anger when Prohibitionist Ed. Hoover was turned away from the polls.

It expressed disgust when the vote of Somerset borough was announced.

It looked real sick when the returns from Salisbury and Garrett were received.

And this is the way the old Scull "Phys" has been looking ever since the result in the county is known.

THE BEST FAMILY SALVE.

There are many cheap counterfeits on the market, all of which are worthless, and quite a few are dangerous, while DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve is perfectly harmless and cures. Sold by E. H. Miller. 5-1

The Republican voters of Somerset county on Saturday obeyed the time-worn injunction: "Never put off 'till to-morrow what you can do to-day." They annihilated the Scull gang of bolters, and by their ballots served notice that they can expect but little sympathy from true Republicans.—Windber Journal.

The Congressional conference for this district convened in Harrisburg, Wednesday of last week. As per former agreement of "the powers that be" in Greene, Fayette and Somerset counties, Hon. Allan F. Cooper, our present popular and efficient congressman was renominated. The nominee is highly satisfactory to the district, and he will be triumphantly elected in November.

By a harmonious arrangement of the politicians of Fayette, Somerset and Greene counties, Hon. F. M. Fuller, of Fayette, and Captain Crago, of Greene, will represent our congressional district as delegates in the Republican National convention. Their alternates are Hons. S. A. Kendall and N. B. Critchfield. Our Ex-Sheriff Good has been chosen as a Presidential elector. The arrangement is satisfactory all around.

The Somerset Standard refers to the editor of the Meyersdale Commercial as old Mrs. Lou Smith. The Standard is in error, for the old bat never was married. It is old Miss Lou Smith, and the figety old thing has been missing it on every political move she has made in the last five years. There was once a time when old Miss Lou should have been married, but Lord pity any one that would want to make a match with her now, even in a political way.

ELIJAH LIVENWOOD, the sugar king, who more than thrice has refused a crown, kept himself hid for about a week after the primary. This week, however, he passed through town on a horse that was going at Dan Patch speed. We asked his son Dan, who clerks in Miller's drug store, what it all meant. Dan replied that Dr. R. M. Beachy, the noted veterinary surgeon, had just 'phoned to the "old man" to come down quick, bring old Mrs. John N. Davis's camphor bottle along and help get old Miss Lou Smith out of her after-election trance.

The poor old Somerset Herald is still sobbing, slobbering, blubbering, bellowing, howling, scowling, scolding, crying and lying about the late Republican primary election. But "let the galled jade wince," for its howls and wails are music to our ears, and it demonstrates that green cucumbers are not the only producers of bellyache. Thus, in a measure, is the green cucumber vindicated, and thus, with its treasure, is the green Scull gang annihilated. The choir will now please put away its peanuts and screech the funeral dirge, and the true Republicans will come forward with their tin cans, dead cats, rotten mackerel, etc., to decorate the grave of party treachery.

CAREER OF JOHN P. ELKIN.

Sketch of Life of Republican Nominee for Supreme Judge.

John P. Elkin, named for Supreme Court Justice, was born in West Mahoning township, Indiana county, Pa., January 11, 1860. In 1874 his father, Francis Elkin, with others, founded at Wellsville, O., the American Tin Plate Company, which erected the first tin plate mill in this country. In this mill John P. Elkin worked during several of his boyhood years. He was educated in the common schools of Smicksburg, Indiana county, and at the Indiana Normal School. At the age of 15 he began teaching school, an occupation he followed for several years. In 1882 he entered the law department of the University of Michigan and graduated two years later.

In the same year he was admitted to the bar of Indiana county and was also elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. Two years later he was re-elected. He was a delegate to a number of Pennsylvania Republican State conventions and permanent chairman of that of 1891. For several years he was chairman of the Republican State committee. For nearly three years he was deputy attorney general under Attorney General McCormick, and was appointed attorney general by Governor Stone, which position he held during the latter's entire administration. He was the most prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor two years ago, but was defeated by Senator Quay abandoning him for Judge Pennypacker.

A Few After Election Echoes from the Somerset Standard.

If you want something soft to put under your carpet call on J. C. Lowry for a bundle of the first and last issue of his Taxpayer.

The bolters talk of carrying their fake into the Dauphin county court. If they do they had better take an undertaker along to bring it home.

With but two exceptions every candidate on the Scull ticket was defeated in his home district, and in every district in the county where he has ever lived.

That crowd of Scull candidates who were chasing about Somerset on that Saturday night three weeks ago to find Carl Shaffer probably are now sorry they found him.

The editor of the Taxpayer trusts that its millions of patrons will bear patiently with its absence till he can get out of the Bolters' hospital. His symptoms are those of grip, accompanied by a feeling of goneness, and a dark brown taste. His temperature is 105 in the shade, and respiration somewhat jerky.

You needn't wonder why the Bozoo sent up a ten-by-twelve howl this week. It's only trying to let its candidates down without "busting" them. It made its candidates believe that "anti-court-house" was an issue (and they were about the only persons who did believe it), and then it pulled their legs to an unnatural length. It is now trying to keep them from seeing the fake.

There's the Meyersdale, the home of Mrs. Lou Smith and her Gatlin' Gun. What do you think would have happened over there if Mrs. Smith had been permitted to fire one more volley of court-house tacks? The thought chills to the very marrow. What the Regulars did to the Old Lady was enough, dear knows; but what they might have done if the Old Girl had had one more fit is appalling even to think of.

Judge Sulzberger of Philadelphia, in the trial of an election case said: "A man can't be a Republican and at the same time be a leader of the hosts that are trying to defeat the Republican party." Under this ruling, which is in entire harmony with both justice and common sense, the whole Scull crowd should have been turned away from the polling place at Somerset, last Saturday, for they have been "leading the hosts that have been trying to defeat the Republican party" for the last five years.

The polls had not been open long when Ed. Hoover presented himself to vote, but Barron told him he could not do so, as that was a Republican primary, at which only Republicans could vote. At the Spring election Hoover declared himself to be a Prohibitionist (don't laugh), and presented a watcher's certificate which he said was his authority from that party to remain in the election room. Being a Prohibitionist, therefore, he had no right to vote at a Republican primary. Later came Aleck Postlethwaite, who was one of the sponsors for the "Citizens" party at the spring election, and he was turned away, as he should have been.

Meyersdale Has a Carrie Nation.

Whatever else the bustling Metropolis may lack, she comes to the front with a saloon smasher that bids fair to force the Kansas Carrie to look to her laurels. One evening last week she invaded the Meyersdale hotels, where she found her luckless spouse "up against" a large schooner of that which promises eventually to make the town famous. With introductory remarks that would not look well in print, she grabbed the glass, and, dashing its contents in the face of her thoroughly dismayed husband, threw the empty glass at the bartender, and, missing its mark, narrowly escaped the cash register and several other expensive furnishings back of the bar. She then grabbed her recreant husband by the ear and led him home, where he is repenting his folly, and computing the interest upon his large holdings in reality, etc., in that borough.—Rockwood Gazette.

ELAINE ROZE'S NEW YORK LETTER.

The Oriental Era in Dress and Perfumes—Dress for Out-Of-Door Life.

Out-of-door life the woman of to-day will have, and whether golfing, riding, automobiling or walking, as her taste or purse may indicate, she must be suitably gowned. No longer are her gowns for more formal wear given precedence, but she recognizes the importance of making a judicious selection of her gown for general wear, for undoubtedly she will be more often seen in it than in any other.

Let it be trim and neat—jaunty as she likes, but never "fussy." Let it be of material that is comfortable, stylish, and of all things weather-defying, which is entirely possible in these days of rain-proofed cloths.

The vast majority of New York woman-kind face the April vagaries of Dame Nature fearlessly, in serviceable gowns of bright mohair or natty woven mixtures of Australian wool and silk. Priestley cravenetted, these frocks give to the wearer a smart appearance if the sun is shining, and an equally up-to-date look if caught in a shower.

In my illustration is depicted one of these ideal gowns, worn with a washable white silk, lace-trimmed waist. The little kimono here shown is a bit of prettiness that the dawn of the Oriental era in dress has brought us.

There has never been anything more picturesque than the kimono with which the Japanese beauty has coquetishly, with the true grace of artistic temperament, draped her form for more generations than exist in Occidental records of attire.

For many years we have been appreciative of the beauties of Oriental fabrics, as adapted to cozy corners and negligee garments, but to-day these exquisite creations are receiving enthusiastic recognition in their use in the construction of dainty gowns, and happy is she who has a bit of Oriental embroidery or a scarf that she can fashion into a fascinating stock or charming bodice.

And the popularity of the Oriental atmosphere has permeated the perfume field, and were until recently mildy's every movement recalled to us the scent of some familiar flower, we are now wafted back, in the quaint odor of Vaniline's Sandalwood, to our childhood's recollections of the dear old sandalwood fan.

The dress skirt worn with the charming negligee garment of the Flowery Kingdom is one of the most modish creations in cream Peau de Crepe, which has taken front rank among silks for shirtwaist and lingerie purposes, as well as for gowns for formal occasions, and in white is one of the leading silks for wedding gowns. ELAINE ROZE.

A THOUGHTFUL MAN.

M. M. Austin, of Winchester, Ind., knew what to do in the hour of need. His wife had such an unusual case of stomach and liver trouble, physicians could not help her. He thought of and tried Dr. King's New Life Pills and she got relief at once and was finally cured. Only 25c. at E. H. Miller's Drug Store. 5-1

The Only Wines Fit For Invalids.

The chemical change that takes place in wine while ageing and depositing its unhealthy parts is too little understood and appreciated. It is wonderfully improved for medicinal use. Each racking after six months rest during a number of years extracts its unhealthy parts. Speer's Port Grape Wine and Burgundy are not bottled until nine years old, and racked every six months during that time. Old doctors in wine countries of Europe understand this.
