CAPITAL CRIMES.

London's Low Percentage as Compared With Our Own.

Whether one meditates the practice of murder as one of the fine arts, as De Quincey, in a very strained attempt at humor, considered it, or merely a resort to it as a brutal gratification of a moment's passion or of a desire for vengeance cherished for years, London is evidently about the last place in the world which he should select for the scene of his crime. From the latest report for the metropolitan police district of that city it appears that in not one instance of murder there during the last twelve months did the police fail to find a clue to follow or to arrest the criminal. Of the apprehended murderers nine-twentieths were promptly convicted and hanged, three-twentieths were sent to the penitentiary, four-twentieths were adjudged insane, and confined in asylums, and apparently the only reason why the other four-twentieths did not meet one or the other of these fates was because they anticipated the inevitable by committing suicide.

That is a record for police ability and promptness and efficiency of criminal prosecution of which any community might well be proud. Of course, there are American municipalities that can make as good a showing in this respect, where not one of the murders of a year goes unavenged. But this is certainly not true of the larger American cities, where the conditions favorable to crime, approximate those in the English capital. Without feeling the need of consulting statistics which might be hard to find, every reader of the newspapers must admit that murders are often committed in cities like New York and Chicago that are not followed by the early or even the ultimate apprehension of the perpetrators, and that even when arrests are made there is no sure guarantee here that false sentiment, influence or money will not save the criminal from deserved punishment. Compared with the record in this respect in the larger American cities, that in London is surely enviable.

And this is one reason—perhaps the greatest reason of all—why London's record for number of murders is from the American point of view almost enviable. During the year covered by the latest report, in the London metropolitan police district, which is an area of 688 square miles with a population of more than six and a half millions, only twenty murders were committed. Is there any American city with an equally heterogeneous and criminally disposed population similarly situated that makes as good a showing in this respect? Not long ago statistics of the number of murders published, showing them to be far up in the thousands, which were sufficient to convince us that we were very far from being even reasonably successful in dealing with this crime; the London figures now given prove that we are much less successful here than are the authorities there.

Is there any other reason for the difference than that suggested by the difference shown in the fates of murderers there and here? If punishment for the crime were so sure that, as in London, a fourth of the same murderers would take their own lives rather than face a jury, would not the proportion of murders to population be greatly reduced?

At any rate the proportionately very small number of murders in London must be closely and casually connected with the certainty with which the crime is punished; the two facts naturally go together. But no more naturally than do large numbers of murders and that weakness or defect in the American system of criminal justice which allow many murderers to escape. Probably another cause which makes the murder record a blacker one in the United States is the habit of carrying deadly weapons on the person, which is, of course, much more prevalent here than in London. Where the American, in his moments of passion, has in his revolver a quick and ready means of killing a person who has offended him, the Londoner, though perhaps equally reckless and murderous in intention, must usually employ a more clumsy and less deadly weapon. Better enforcement in this country of the laws against carrying concealed weapons and surer and prompt punishment of murderers would surely make our murder record less below the London standard.—Providence Journal.

COULD CRIPPLE RUSSIA.

Country's Money Supply Makes Her Depend on Powers.

That every power in Europe is jealous of Russia and would be glad to see her schemes of conquest in the Orient defeated and the nation humbled in the dust it too appears to require emphasis. An article on Russia published in the last number of "L'Europeen," a journal of international influence issued in Paris, has attracted no little attention in the European press. The author is the Danish publicist, Bjornson Bjornson.

He assumes that Russia is an undesirable and dangerous element in Europe and Asia, and as a means of thwarting her further advance proposes that other nations stop supplying her with money. Since 1899, the writer estimates, Russia has borrowed abroad $700,000,000 with which to build fleets and to maintain an army no less than to establish the gold standard and build railways, and M. Bjornson seems to take it very much to heart that the larger part of this foreign gold, which has maintained the Russian institution and served its plan of oppression and of conquest, has flowed from the country of liberty, equality and fraternity.

"It is admitted in France and America," M. Bjornson goes on to say, "that without French gold the Russian institution would have gone to smash long ago. No centralized power, even the best, is for any length of time, capable of governing so many and varied peoples. No hand, no matter how powerful, can stretch over such an enormous territory or unite so many contrary destinies created by varied climates and by numerous racial and religious differences.

"But what the best government, what the most powerful hand cannot perform becomes chaos and misery under a feeble autocratic power or a bureaucratic institution that is mercenary and mendacious, unstable and oppressive. Without the foreigner's aid it would have destroyed itself, whether by revolution or by asphyxia. What, however, would have been most natural would have been a general disintegration of the administration of the colossal masses of Russia according to a scheme of federalization.

"With the aid of the foreigner's gold all the inflammable material of this formidable accumulation of injustice and distress has been able to subsist until it has become a danger to us all. Unless a war precipitates her upon her neighbors—a war which would be followed through long years by thunderings and tumults—she will continue to court them as of yore. On this point Russian and foreigner agree. But war will come. If up to the present time the all-powerful Russian institution has not recoiled before any of the means taken to prolong its existence, why should it recoil before war? Whatever the result of the war, one thing is certain—the payment of interest will cease. Russia will thank the aid given her by state bankruptcy."—Exchange.

Spain's Hostility to Us.

The predicted hostility to the government's appointment of Mgr. Nozales, formerly Archbishop of Manila, as Archbishop of Valencia, in succession to the late Cardinal Herrero y Espinosa, has materialized and is increasing.

The Governor of Madrid has closed the Zarzuela Theatre because the audience nightly demanded anti-Nozales songs, which resulted in excited demonstrations. Similar songs are being sung elsewhere. Some of the singers and several members of their audiences have been arrested.

The authorities have threatened to shut all the offending theatres. A number of dramatic authors met and agreed to prohibit the performance of their works throughout Spain unless the Zarzuela Theatre was at once re-opened and the anti-Nozales songs were allowed.

After a conference with the Governor of Madrid, however, they decided to suspend the execution of their threat.

The incident is symptomatic of the general anti-clerical troubles which are disturbing the country. The authorities fear that the troubles will develop seriously.

The opposition to the appointment of Mgr. Nozales is based on his attitude toward the Americans before and after the surrender of Manila. He is accused of disloyalty to Spain, and of pandering to the Americans for the purpose of ingratiating himself with them.

Since he left the Philippines Mgr. Nozales has been a candidate for several vacant sees in Spain, but the successive governments did not venture to appoint him, fearing the anger of the public.

Belated French Honors.

On New Year's Day, among the medals distributed by the French government were four given for deeds of valor some years ago. One was to an old soldier of the Eightieth Infantry who was wounded in the assault on the central redoubt of Sebastopol on September 8th, 1855; a second to an old soldier of the Fifteenth Infantry who was wounded at Solferino on June 24th, 1859; a third to a soldier wounded in the attack on Sebastopol on August 29th, 1855; and the fourth to another soldier wounded in the trenches before the fortress on June 24th of the same year. These beat the record made by our own medal of honor.

Sugar a Stimulant.

People with a sweet tooth are rejoicing in the fact that sugar is coming more and more to help make up the diet of men in training for contests. German authorities say that it is a great feeder of muscular power, and a Dutch army surgeon asserts that he found that the best means to maintain soldiers in vigor during marches and fighting was by a generous allowance of sugar. Each man received a handful at a time.

Tibetan Mark of Appreciation.

My first real Tibetan feast occurred in Darjiling, to which were also invited Dr. Yenryo Inouye (the Japanese "Borderland" philosopher) and Kang Yu Wei, the Chinese reformer and scholar. Our Tibetan host expressed his respect for us and appreciation of our remarks by rising to his feet and extending his tongue to its full length.—Kwai Kawaguchi, in The Century.
