the courage and devotion of every arm of the service under his com-mand, and especially to the bravery of the troops to whom was set the task of recapturing the Sykwantun hills, on the north bank of the Taitse river. The engagement of the night of September 2 was productive of some of the most severe fighting of the whole battle. It was practically a company commander's fight, com-mands becoming separated in the darkness and independent units act-ing upon their own initialive with the one object of carrying out the commander's orders to retake the heights. The necessity of retaking the Sky-wantun heights formed the first break in General Kuropatkin's plan, and lost him a whole day, Septem-her 2, and thus delayed launching the blow against Kuroki, and when the Russians had just regained a foot-hold on the coveted position, Orloff's failure to hold the Jananese advance the Russians had just regained a root-hold on the coveted position. Orloff's failure to hold the Japanese advance against the Yental mines threatened the envelopment of Kuropatkin on the north, crippled the whole Rus-sian scheme and forced the now his-toric retreat to Mukden.

The officers assert that the safe contained merchandise of some value, company papers in tran-sit, etc., but no money. The engineer as the train rounded the curve, saw a red lantern on the track and stopped the train. Im-mediately the engine, express car and baggage car were boarded by the robbers. The messenger of the ex-press car was compelled to open the door. The safe was dynamited and the contents taken, after which the engine was then cut off and the robbers ran it through Letts and to within two miles of Columbus June-tion, where it was left standing. The bandits disappeared and no trace of them has been found.
