Word from Brer' Williams.
Lawd, we wants ter feel thankful fer what we 'bout ter receive, but we don't want ter git in de hands er no receiver! I don't want no wings ter fly wid in glory; Flyin' is too much like work, en de Lord knows we'll need rest then. We done lost de faith dat moves mountains. Dynamite is de thing dat makes headway wid 'em now. De fashion is ter preach hell out de Bible dese days, but dat don't make no diffunce, since so many er us is gwine roun' en raisin' it privately. De good man never blows his own horn, kaze half de time he's too po' ter buy one. Some er dese stars you see up yander may be only de sparks flyin' fum de furnace er de hereafter.—Ex.

To Cure a Balky Horse.
Minneapolis Journal: A crowd blocked the street, and the horse doctor joined it to see what was up. "Ah, a balky horse," he murmured. Then he worked his way through the crowd, saying in an authoritative voice, "Let me pass, friends. I am a veterinary surgeon."
Thus he soon reached the balky horse. He said to the master of the animal: "Put up your whip. It will do no good. I am a veterinary. I'll cure your horse of the balks for you. Watch me."
He took hold of the horse's front leg at the fetlock, bent it at the knee joint, and held it in this position for three minutes. Then he put the leg down again, and chirruped to the animal. It started off as though it had never balked in its life.
"An odd remedy for the balks, but an infallible one," said the doctor. "It has never failed me. Any balky horse, if you hold one of its forelegs up for three minutes, will be over its balkiness by the time the leg is lowered to the ground again."

Brother Dickey on Money.
"I see," said Brother Dickey, "dat some er de preachers is agin' takin' any er Kunnel Rockefeller's money—even when he want ter give it ter 'um. But it's my opinion dat dey in de wrong 'bout it. No matter who de man is dat gives 'um de money, ef dey does de Lawd's work wid it, won't it fill de bill en kiver de groun'?" De way I looks at it is dis way: Er ole Satan wuz ter come ter me en say: 'Here's a ton er gold what I melted down yander,' does you think I'd light in en 'buse him, en tell him ter take it back whar it come fum? No, sub! I'd des take it en tell him, 'Thanky: I knowed dar wuz some good in you—you ole black raskill, you!'—dat's what I'd tell him—please God!—Ex.

SOME RECENT ROOSEVELTISMS.

One of the greatest lessons taught by the civil war was the lesson of brotherhood.

I think that we Americans have learned the lesson that what is good for some of us is good for all.

A glorious memory is the best of all things for a nation if it spurs that nation to try to rise level with that memory.

We all believe in the Monroe doctrine. I have a little difficulty in getting some of my friends to accept my interpretation of it, but they will in time, because that interpretation has come to stay.

We have a right to ask that our neighbor do his duty toward God and man, but we have no business to dictate to him how he shall worship his Maker and no business to discriminate for or against him because of the way in which he does it.

We are proud now of what our fathers did in the days that tried men's souls, and in time of war or in time of peace we must so conduct ourselves that those who come after us will have the same right to be proud of their ancestors as this generation has to be proud of our ancestors of the civil war.

There is not anything very difficult in government. It is simply the applying of certain common sense principles that we apply among ourselves. The man who is a decent man will be a decent husband, a decent father, a decent neighbor, and in public life he will do the right thing.

You need to have honesty as the first trait, and courage is equally indispensable, and the two qualities are not enough. In addition to honesty, in addition to courage, we need the saving grace of common sense. If we have these qualities combined in the average man we can be certain that the problems before our nation will be settled, as I firmly believe they will be settled, aright for future generations.

A man who is a good neighbor, a good husband, a good father, is the type of man who makes a good citizen. The person that you want to have as a neighbor is the man to whom you can tie, on whom you can count, the man who is a game man in time of trouble, but who does not seek trouble; the man who makes good; the man who is decent and square in his dealings with others. That is just the type you have got to have in public life.
