REPUBLICANS ALERT

Active Work Already Under Way For the Fall Campaign.

VOTERS ARE BEING ENROLLED

The Forces in the Several Counties Have Been Lined Up For a Thorough Canvass of the State.

[Special Correspondence.]
Harrisburg, July 4.

Initial steps have already been taken for an aggressive campaign for the whole Republican ticket in this state.

While the orators will not take to the hustings until September, that always effective, powerful and mighty force, the Republican county committees, now silently at work, before many days shall roll by will have completed the enrollment of over 800,000 voters. Every registered voter in the commonwealth, outside of the cities of Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Allegheny, will have his name recorded in the poll books of these Republican committees, and within a short time a canvass will be begun to enlighten the chairman of the Republican state committee as to the political leanings of every one of these voters. Local organizations look after the registrations in the three cities named above.

Pennsylvania's superb Republican organization has not its equal in the world.

It has time and again demonstrated its ability to cope with every problem with which it has been confronted, and in the contest this fall there is no reason to doubt that the outcome will be entirely satisfactory to all well wishers of Republicanism.

While the average citizen is paying but little attention to politics today, the men who have made possible the great victories of the Republican party in this state are alert and active. The Republican organization of the Keystone state is a great institution. It was not constructed in a day, nor in a year. It has taken many years to perfect it, and it is built upon a substantial foundation. It rests upon the intelligence, the public spirit and the patriotism of the people. Leaders may come and leaders may go, but the great Republican organization of Pennsylvania will continue on indefinitely to represent the will of the Republican voters of the commonwealth, and conserve the interests of the whole people.

County Chairman to the Front.

The county chairman, that interesting and versatile character recently portrayed by George Ade, the playwright in a popular comedy, now occupies the centre of the political stage in this state. Following out instructions from Colonel Wesley R. Andrews, chairman of the Republican state committee, the county chairman is a busy man. He is supervising the copying of the lists of voters filed with the county commissioners into the poll books furnished by the state committee.

The next move will be to have the members of the county committee from each election district carefully canvass their respective districts, and indicate in the books the politics of every voter. Other information of value to the party organization relative to the voters will also be gathered. About 6000 members of the county committees will be engaged on this work.

Within a short time the chairman of the state committee will ask for the appointment of the auxiliary committees and the vigilantes in each election district in the state. There will be about 60,000 of these loyal, earnest and aggressive Republican workers.

Young Men Are Wanted.

"These are the men who are the bone and sinew of the Republican party in Pennsylvania," said Chairman Andrews a few days ago. "They can't be bribed, bought or bulldozed. They represent the best blood of Republicanism of the state. They are Republicans from principle, and a great majority of them give their time and services to the party without expectation or thought of personal reward."

A special effort is to be made this year to get an exceptionally large percentage of young men enlisted for this work. First voters are to be encouraged to enlist in the ranks of the Republican party to go among their neighbors and interest them in the campaign, and to plan for the polling of every Republican vote that can be got out on election day. Young men are to be impressed with the fact that nearly every American president was first introduced to public life through the medium of the party organization in the election precinct. Ambitious young Pennsylvanians are to be urged to take up the cause of Republicanism in their respective localities, and to actively identify themselves with the county committees and others who have been looking after the affairs of the party in their precincts and to aid them in every possible manner in the canvass which will shortly be begun.

Chairman Andrews and His Plans.

A member of the Dauphin county Republican committee received a letter from State Chairman Andrews yesterday, in which, among other things, he said:

Everything is in excellent shape for the opening of the campaign. The meeting of the state committee, at which Hon. John Stewart was nominated for the supreme bench, brought together a representative gathering of active Republicans from all over the state. Reports received as to the condition of the party from every section were of the most gratifying character. The party was never so harmonious, nor was there ever a better spirit displayed toward the candidates on a ticket. My daily mail is very large, showing a deep interest in the party work now under way.

I shall be at the state headquarters, on and off, until the second week in July, when I will go to my home in Meadville, where I will attend to all correspondence until the formal opening of the Republican state headquarters in Philadelphia, which will be on or about August 15.

Five Strong Nominees.

The fact that there are five candidates on the state ticket this year, will mean that the total vote will be swelled by the activity of the personal friends and neighbors of these nominees, who will be anxious to have each of them given a complimentary vote in his home and nearby counties.

The head of the ticket, Justice John Stewart, of Franklin county, nominee for the supreme bench, has a large following, and is favorably known in almost every county in the state. Members of the bar with whom he is personally acquainted will take pleasure in working to swell his vote.

The same can be truthfully said also of each of the nominees for the superior court. Judge Charles E. Rice, president judge of the superior court, who comes from Luzerne county, is particularly strong throughout the anthracite coal region. He has won an enviable reputation as a jurist, and his personal qualities have endeared him to all who have had intimate relations with him.

The battle-scarred war veteran, General James A. Beaver, former governor and candidate to succeed himself on the superior court bench, has long commanded the admiration of his fellow citizens for his patriotism, his sterling worth, and his fairness as a judge. His home county of Centre, and, in fact, every county in the state, will have a host of champions of Judge Beaver, among them members of the Grand Army, who will leave nothing undone to make him run well up with the head of the ticket in the balloting in November next. Judge George E. Orady, of Huntingdon, is known as one of the most affable and approachable judges on the bench in Pennsylvania. He, too, comes up for reelection to the superior court, and it is predicted that his candidacy will contribute materially to strengthen the entire Republican ticket in the state.

Republicans of his home county are already engaged in a personal canvass in his interest, and they declare that he will be given one of the largest votes ever cast for a candidate from that county.

A Messenger Boy's Force of Character.

J. Lee Plummer, of Blair county, the nominee for state treasurer, is counted upon to poll the largest vote ever cast for a candidate for state treasurer in Pennsylvania. His personal integrity is unquestioned, and his political career has been such as to commend him to the voters of his section of the state who have known him for years, and who insisted upon his nomination at the hands of the Republican state convention. He began life in the humble capacity of messenger boy. He afterward became a brakeman on the Pennsylvania railroad, and then by hard work and many sacrifices, he had himself admitted to the bar. His success has been an inspiration to the young men of his section, and his popularity has been attested on many an occasion. As a member of the legislature he worked to bring about many reforms, and his interest in the charities of the state was shown in valuable services as chairman of the appropriation committee.

The fact that all of the candidates on the Republican ticket were nominated without a contest, and each by a unanimous vote, is an indication of the sentiment that prevails throughout the state towards the several nominees.

Must Look to Congress.

The fact that a governor and a full delegation to congress are to be elected next year will add to the interest of the campaign this fall. The importance of keeping the Republican lines intact will be appreciated by all who are familiar with political conditions throughout the country.

There has been observed a tendency in many sections of the country to revive the agitation for a revision of the tariff, and it is anticipated that Pennsylvania's manufacturing interests will require the full and aggressive support of a solid Republican delegation in the next national house of representatives to protect them from an onslaught which is bound to come from the tariff revisionists.

Pennsylvania profits more than any other state through the protective tariff, and it is vitally interesting to every Pennsylvanian that Republicanism of the stalwart type shall continue in the ascendancy. The iron and steel industries of the Keystone state have furnished the material for American warships, many of which have been built by Pennsylvania labor on the banks of the Delaware. The arsenals in Philadelphia, employing many Pennsylvanians and women, are now engaged in furnishing supplies and ammunition for the soldiers and sailors of the United States. It cannot be denied that the prestige of her Republicanism has given Pennsylvania first consideration at the hands of the Republicans of the nation, and it is essential that there shall be no wavering in the loyalty to the principles or the candidates of Republicanism on the part of Pennsylvanians at this time.

HOME DRESSMAKING
By Ray Manton.
A CHARMING LITTLE PRACTICE.

There is a charm about the frock that is slightly low at the neck with short sleeves that always makes itself felt and which makes it a favorite one both for warm weather and for party wear. Now is one that can be made in that fashion or with yoke and cuffs as may be liked and is consequently suited to a variety of occasions. As the ease of the model the material is unbordered muslin. Instead of embroidery, but with that material in mind, the design is so made that it is easily made in any material. The design is so made that it is easily made in any material. The design is so made that it is easily made in any material. The design is so made that it is easily made in any material.

The surplus cover cover as well as the surplus waist is greatly in demand and is exceedingly dainty and becoming. Illustrated is one that is particularly well adapted for wear beneath the fashionable blouses and which can be made as simple as a chemise or as one may like. In the case of the model the material is batiste and the trimming Valenciennes lace with insertion, a combination that is always desirable as both material and lace lend with satisfaction, but lace, muslin and the lace are in every way appropriate while trimming can be embroidery or any suitable edging. The fronts are made full: the shoulders are and are leaped over the edge to give the surplus effect, but are joined to a smoothly fitted bosom portion, which does away with all fulness over the hips. Material required for medium size is 1 1/2 yds. 42 inches wide with 3/4 yd. of lace and 3/4 yd. of collar. Patterns mailed by Fashion Department ten cents each.

Vermont's Disgrace.

The protest against the hanging of May Rogers, the Vermont woman who deliberately murdered her husband for his $800 life insurance, is something akin to maudlin sympathy.

The excuse that she is a woman is not sufficient in law or in justice. She was not such a woman that man's innate sense of chivalry seeks to shield and protect. She was a fiend at heart, a veritable devil in human shape, and a failure to mete out to her the law's penalty will put a premium on crimes such as she committed.

Her execution will not be a disgrace to the state as her defenders allege. The disgrace was consummated when she committed her unnatural crime, and if punishment fails that disgrace will only be intensified.—Connellsville Courier.

What Luther Burbank Has Done.

In the Country Calendar for July, W. S. Hardwood gives the following summary of the work of the marvelous Californian plant-breeder:

"For thirty-five years Mr. Burbank has been at work creating new forms of plant life and improving old ones. In that time he has created by breeding and selection, more than 2500 distinct species of plants.

"Some of his creations are:
"The primus berry, a fruit unknown before, made by the union of a blackberry and a raspberry, which union scientific men said was impossible.
"The white blackberry, very beautiful, with a delicate flavor.
"The phenomenal berry, a similar creation, a cross between a raspberry and a California dewberry, having the color of a raspberry and the shape of a blackberry, but larger than either, far more prolific and with a flavor surpassing both.
"The plumcot (result of the union of the apricot and the plum), of rare flavor and richness, again disproving the dictum of the scientists.
"A plum with no pit, and one with the flavor of the Bartlett pear.
"A walnut first so thin of shell that the birds could peck through it, afterward bred backward along the path it had come until a shell of the required thickness was secured.
"He has produced a new thornless cactus, a combination of many other varieties, which bears a fruit, too, for man and beast, and which will redeem the desert places of the earth; he has done all these, and many other marvelous things not mentioned here for lack of space."
