RUSSIAN SAILORS MUTINY

Fierce Battle Fought in the City of Cronstadt.

RIOTING CONTINUED ALL NIGHT.

Mutinous Sailors Say Their Chief Grievances Are Poor Food and Clothing and Lack of Liberty.

The sailors of the Russian squadron at Cronstadt mutined, overpowered their officers, landed and attacked the shops, public buildings and spirits stores. The troops were called out and fighting ensued, during which machine guns were used and many persons were killed or wounded. In addition a number of houses were set on fire. The fighting for lasted all night long.
The outbreak started when the sailors of the "Seventh Fort Equip by revolted, and, it is rumored, it some of their officers. They killed some of their officers. They marched out of the barracks and immediately plundered four spirits shops. Crazed with liquor they returned and seized their arms and then went on a rampage, firing promiscuously upon the troops and the loyal sailors. Later they were joined by many of their comrades.

The number of mutineers totaled 3,000. It is difficult to ascertain the number of the casualties, but officers

The governor in his telegram said that many of the mutinous sailors tried to escape in boats to the mainland, but that they were captured and were being brought back to Cronstadt.

Gen. Trepoff has been removed from the powerful position of governor general of St. Petersburg and tober, 1903 assistant minister of the interior, and assistant minister of the interior, and Russia's premier has agreed to immediate universal suffrage. The retirement of Gen. Trepoff is hailed with delight. It strongly enhances the chances of the populace giving Count Witte time to carry out his projects, which were in danger, owing to the impatience of the revolutionists.

The orthodox clergy have issued a stirring appeal to the provincial priests to aid in the restoration of peace in the country.
