Home Circle Department.

A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers As They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide.

Be queen of your home. Reign supreme in the hearts of your husband and children.

The average housewife finds more use for a tack-hammer and stove-lid lifter than for algebra and geometry.

The humblest home may be made attractive with flowers and music, and these are factors of happiness far greater than the trappings of wealth.

Half the joy of life comes from getting good out of things as we go along. Some of us are always putting off our enjoyments. After a while we expect to take a rest, see a friend, read a book. But after a while never comes. The good time we are looking forward to lies as far away as ever. All our life is spent in meaning to overtake it and enjoy it. Meanwhile we toil, drudge, and grow old, passing by with unseeing eye the happiness we might get out of every day.

Let us study the value of the beautiful. The influence of the beautiful is largely of a subconscious nature, it is silent, permeating and powerful. The ministry of the beautiful has a refining effect. A taste for music, poetry, pictures, etc., tends to destroy the attraction for the vulgar. A home of beauty, of taste and refinement always tends to elevate and ennoble the mind, and cultivate the spirit of contentment. Beauty fills the world, if we have eyes to see it. It is open to all. The rose is as fragrant, the lily as white and the hyacinth as delicately blue, when cultivated by the poor, as by the jeweled fingers of the wealthy.

GOOD MOTHERS.

It is claimed that all the Presidents of the United States had good mothers. It is said that John Q. Adams until the day of his death said the prayer his mother had taught him. Lincoln said, "All that I am I owe to my mother." Garfield kissed the wrinkled face of his mother on the day of his inauguration and said: "You brought me to this." Grover Cleveland said, "Worldly honors or worldly perplexities will never cause me to forget the lessons my mother taught me." As the shadows lengthen, the memory of a mother's love becomes intensified. The vision grown dim with age becomes clear, and pictures of childhood days rise before us in their perfections. It is well so few instances are on record where a mother has failed to impress her children with the value and purity of a mother's love. Most of our great men accord to their mothers the credit of their best achievements. The moral nature of the child is largely what he inherits from his mother. Genius often comes from the father. We often see sons of plain, uneducated mothers rise to eminence. A mother may be morally and mentally strong, yet physically so weak she can give to her child little aside from her lovable nature, and this child will grow into a passive creature, who will never cause a ripple in the world's affairs.

To emphasize the influence of the mother physiologically is unnecessary in our day, when everyone has his quota of scientific knowledge. Queen Victoria was a grand sample of perfect motherhood. This queenly woman and womanly queen has had an influence upon the world in wifehood and motherhood. The mother of Napoleon, Marie Bamolino, was not what is termed an educated woman. She married at the age of "sweet sixteen," yet developed into a very strong character. It is claimed by his biographers that Napoleon inherited his firm will and lofty ambition from his mother, and not from his easy-going father. Napoleon said of his mother, "She has the head of a man on the shoulders of a woman," and he always went to her for counsel in the important affairs of life, yet he did not always follow her advice. We shall not venture to speak of Mary Ball, the mother of Washington, further than to say she was a woman of high temper and indomitable spirit. Her nephew, Lawrence Washington, who occasionally visited in the Washington home, said, "I was ten times more afraid of my aunt than of my parents; my aunt was the presiding genius of the home, and she awed me by her kindness."

A POPULAR FOOD PLANT.

What a great discovery the tomato was as an article of food. While most food plants are of comparative ancient origin, there are plenty of people living today who can remember when it was only an ornament cultivated for the beauty of its dainty blossoms and handsome fruit. While its beauty was admired, it was considered like the poisonous oak, dangerous to even handle, except by "dark complected" persons. Years of acquaintanceship, however, wore off its superstition and a few "fool-hardy" actually owned up to having tasted the fruit.

From this small beginning, has gradually grown a use that makes today an industry with a combined capital of over thirty millions of dollars, which disburses millions of dollars to its employees each year and aggregates an output of two hundred and forty millions cans. This product goes into every household in the land and is as familiar an article of diet as any other of the staple products of the soil. Each year sees an increasing consumption, and the more intimate the acquaintance the greater the use.

The reason for this is very obvious. There is no better appetizer, and as an article of seasoning the tomato imparts a taste that cannot be imitated. It is so distinctive that its presence can be located even in minute particles, yet the pungency has everything that delights the palate and nothing that offends the nostril.

The growth of its general popularity dates back to the time of the first successful packing house. When the use of the tomato as a food was established, demand made it necessary to have a cheaper price than the local market gardener could afford, and to meet this the tin can as a diminisher of space was called into requisition. It was found much cheaper proportionately to raise one thousand bushels than ten, so by the aid of the tin the cooked product could be placed on the consumer's table at a price so reasonable, as to enable its daily use. Moreover, the article put in the can is brought fresh picked from the field, hermetically sealed and immediately sterilized by heat, while the uncaned fruit is frequently shipped for hundreds of miles before it is used as a food. This artificially ripened fruit must be gathered green, and the red color it finally assumes is the withering of hungry tissues that should have fed the fruit with the red nourishing juice that comes from the soil and by the aid of Mother Nature is thus transformed. No preservative is used by the canner as the action of heat insures keeping for an indefinite time.

There is nothing else so wholesome as this rich, ripe fruit dumped out of the clean white can ready for any use. The taste is equal to the fresh fruit, and every semblance of waste in shape of rind or core has been removed. Eat it?—why the very sight and smell are irresistible, and the most insistent appetite can be sated because of its absolute harmlessness. Its healthfulness has never been attacked, and the rich juices colored as the life-giving fluid act as a tonic even for the invalid stomach. There is no home where its visits are not welcome, and the table of either the millionaire or peasant is alike familiar with its presence. As Indian corn, it is distinctly of American origin, and proud indeed can we be of both of these excellent food plants.

Half-Deaf People.

"If you are deaf in one ear," said the boiler-maker, "I don't care about giving you a job."
"Why?" asked the applicant.
"Because you can't tell what direction sounds come from. Hence in a place like this you would be in great danger."

"How do you know I can't tell what direction sounds come from?" the applicant demanded.
"No person deaf in one ear," replied the boiler-maker, "can do so. A man deaf in one ear will look behind him if a gun goes off on his right. He will look up in the air if a child shrieks at his feet. He will look wildly in front of him if a locomotive whistles in his rear. A boiler shop is no place for such a man."
"I knew I was like this," said the applicant, "but I didn't know all half-deaf people were."
"They all are," said the boiler-maker, "and my shop is no place for them."
