CARS SMASHED TO PIECES

Beven Day Coaches, Carrying Immigrants, Were Crushed Into Kindling Wood.

Thirty persons were killed and more than 50 injured in the wreck of the Southern Pacific express train from New Orleans for San Francisco, at Colton, 60 miles east of Los Angeles, Cal The train took an open switch when speeding 50 miles an hour, and five out of the nine coaches were de-molished. The four cars that remain-ed on the track were badly smashed, of on the track were badly shashed, but all the passengers in them escaped death. One of the four coaches was occupied by Florence Roberts, the actress, and her company of 20 persons playing in 'The Strength of the Weak." The players were severely bruised and shocked.

fore the accident and the switch was then in position.

The train was in the siding before the engineer realized the danger, and before he could bring the express to a stop the locomotive ran into a freight car, and then drove full against the side of an embankment. There are 19 bodies in the Colton morgue, and many more are in the police station. George L. Sharp of Muncie, Ind., has been identified as one of the dead. Six of the dead are women and four small children were killed. The force of the wreck was so tremendous that the sides and roofs of the cars were split, opening seams through which the passengers were shot as if by catepults. One man was thrown 50 feet in a direct line from the siding. Another passenger was flung across the narrow wedge of land to the main track, where his head was crushed by coming in contact with the rail. He died instantly.
