

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why, as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help. If you would have strong hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

It is the Best Pump on the Market. Operated over cisterns and wells where depth does not exceed 50 feet. It will not freeze, rust or rot. It is the most beautiful, strongest and serviceable, and will produce more water. It is entirely sanitary. The water coming up the first tube is into the spout, the over production into the wheel box, draining through the center tube. The base is so constructed that the water never splashes through the sides. We have used this pump in the finest homes in the city in kitchens, porches and yards and it has always proven satisfactory. It is sanitary because it is clean. It purifies the water by the action of the chain and the drainage through the center tube which agitates the water, there being enough air ventilation in the pump, when in action, to keep the water pure and tasteless. OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

The Cloud Wrestler

A Tale of the North.

Near the town of Skidans lived eight brothers with their mother and sister. All of the boys were strong lads except the eldest. The younger ones could hunt and fish and were very fond of wrestling, but the eldest brother lay around the house and neither engaged in the work, nor the athletic sports of the others.

The younger brothers wrestled all the boys in Skidans and tufew them one by one. One day one of them said: "I wish a stranger would come along and wrestle with me. I believe we are the greatest wrestlers in the whole world." Then he went outside the house and cried a challenge call, "Hu-u-ii!" as loud as he could.

As he finished his challenge a cloud came rushing up out of the ocean and out of the cloud stepped a tall youth, with limbs snowy and sound, stripped for wrestling. The stranger youth.

"Did you challenge me?" inquired "I did," replied the younger brother, and at it they went.

The younger brother put up a good fight, but the stranger youth was too much for him and he was thrown finally.

As soon as the younger brother was in the ground the stranger youth said: "Now you are my slave and can get your freedom only when one of your brothers beats me in wrestling." And saying this he jumped with the boy back into the cloud and vanished.

All the family lamented the lost one that night, but at daybreak the next morning another of the brothers went out to the shore and, standing in the light of the rising sun, sent for the challenge cry, "Hu-u-ii!"—long drawn out and high sounding.

So it went on every day until all the brothers had been carried off except the eldest, who was no wrestler. But he was resolved to rescue his brothers if such a thing were possible, and he said to his mother and sister: "Do not weep. I will bathe for strength. I will become strong and will go and find my brothers."

One day, as he was bathing for strength at the mouth of the creek, he heard a noise and looked up to see a lot of fallen trees coming down striking against each other as they were swept along by the current. They came straight toward him and he was afraid and ran ashore.

Upon this all the trees and bushes in the forest and all the birds in the trees began to call out in derision, saying, "Is this the one who is trying to obtain power for himself? His power is weak."

Eldest Brother was so mortified at this that he jumped right back into the water again, and the fallen trees rushed at him. But as they came to him they proved to be only decayed logs—soft, like punk-wood—which broke as they struck together and floated away without harming him.

As he came out of the water Eldest Brother saw, standing on the beach, a short, stout man, with remarkably shrewy limbs, who called out to him "Come here, grandson, and let me see how you can stand punishment."

At first Eldest Brother thought of running away, but, mustering up his courage, he came and stood before the strange man. The man had a knotty stick in his hand and with it he struck Eldest Brother a tremendous whack.

"You will do," said the man. "Now let us see how you can wrestle. I am called Greatest-Strong-Man."

They seized each other and wrestled all over the beach—and down—sometimes one getting the better of it and sometimes the other, until finally Eldest Brother threw Greatest-Strong-Man.

When Greatest-Strong-Man picked himself up he said: "Now you are stout of heart and stout of limb. Challenge him who stole away your brothers."

Early the next morning, he went out and stood on the seashore and cried the challenge cry of "Hu-u-ii!" loud and long. Up from the sea came the cloud with red streaks in it, and out of the cloud stepped the youth who had made slaves of the younger brothers.

"Come and wrestle," said Eldest Brother. The stranger youth laughed "What with you?" said he. "You, the weakest of all the brothers? I have made the strong ones slaves. I will make short work of you." And they began wrestling.

But Eldest Brother was too much for him and threw him flat on his back so that his head struck upon the ground. Then he gave up and told Eldest Brother where he could find the boys and gave him a magic password which would liberate them.

As for the stranger youth, he was so mortified at his defeat that he changed into a rock on the shore, which is still to be seen and is called by the natives around Skidans Wrestling Rock. When it is going to rain the cloud with the red streaks in it is seen to this day, rolling up from the sea, and when the rain follows the people say that the red-streaked cloud is weeping for the stranger youth who became the Wrestling Rock.
