How the Strawberry Was Named.

Many persons have wondered how strawberries got their name. They have been so called by Anglo-Saxon people for hundreds of years, but no corresponding name for them appears in other languages. On the contrary, their fragrance mainly is set forth in the names by which they are called in non-English speaking lands. The old Anglo-Saxon form was "strawberrie." It seems probable that the "straw" is the long stem of the vine, which runs along the ground. Some have thought, however, that in ancient times the Anglo-Saxon berry hunters brought the berries home or sent them to market upon straws. The explanation that the word is a corruption of "strawberry" due to the running habit of strawberry vines, is believed to be erroneous.

Queens Taller Than Kings.

It is a curious fact that at this time nearly all the sovereigns of Europe are shorter than their consorts. For example, King Edward is an inch shorter than Queen Alexandra, Czar Nicholas II. looks quite small by the side of the Czarina; the Kaiser is just a trifle shorter than the German Empress, and, for that reason always insists that she shall sit down when they are photographed together; the King of Italy hardly reaches to the shoulder of Queen Helena; Queen Amelia of Portugal is a shade taller than Don Carlos, and Alfonso of Spain is half a head shorter than Queen Victoria Eugenie. In fact, the King of Norway and the Prince of Montenegro are the only two rulers who are very much taller than their wives.

Tragedies of Balloons.

The disappearance on May 28 of the British war balloon Thresher, in which Lieut. Martin-Leake and Caulfield ascended before Prince Fushimi, recalls that of a Japanese officer who, while before Port Arthur, volunteered to attempt a balloon reconnaissance of the Russian lines. He made the ascension, but misjudged the air currents, and, instead of going over Port Arthur, drifted out to sea. He might have been saved even then, but as the night came on a storm broke and the officer vanished. He was connected with the imperial family of Japan.

Willie and Grandpa.

Willie little Willie Smith took a stroll one morning with Grandpa Smith, both fancy trees, New York City for to see.

Strolling thus, at length they came to a structure known to fame, Brooklyn Bridge, whose arches spanned Watery leagues, from land to land.

As the old man and the child stood and watched the river wild, Grandpa leaning over the side, Dropped his matches in the tide.

"Willie," murmured Grandpa kind, "Save my matches, do you mind? There's a good boy, jump and get them. Ere the angry waves shall wet them."

Willie, with a shout of joy (He was such a willing boy), Leaped into the water's flow, Several hundred feet below.

Voices rose from many a crew, River whistles fairly blew, "Ship ahoy there, man the hatches! Grandpa Smith has lost his matches."

Gallant tore the river crossed, Searching for the matches lost, And at last the box was found, Willie Smith? Oh, he was drowned.

Toad in Terrier's Throat.

A fox terrier, owned by Louis Genin, of Park street, Bloomfield, N. J., picked up a good-sized toad and tried to swallow it. The creature wriggled and kicked in the dog's throat, nearly strangling it.

The terrified terrier, unable to bark, frantically dashed through the street, turning somersaults and rolling about until women sitting on the piazzas of their homes screamed "Mad dog!"

A police man killed the animal with a blow on the head. The toad jumped out of the terrier's mouth and hopped away.—New York World.

One Way To Get Out of It.

Johnny took his seat in the arithmetic class, and the teacher immediately asked for the daily exercises. Johnny hadn't done any, principally because a ball game had proved too fascinating, and then, besides, he wasn't particularly sure which one he ought to do.

"John," said the teacher sternly, "where is your exercise?"

John caught one terrible glance and resolved to say nothing about the ball game.

"You told us yesterday we were to do the eighteenth. But Jimmy Smith said last night it was the seventeenth."

"Well, you've brought nothing at all," said the teacher.

"Please, sir, I was afraid I'd do do the wrong one, so I didn't do any!" gasped Johnny.—Washington Star.

Dog Flaps Train.

In Muskogee a negro who drives the street sweeper has a fine bird dog, which walks ahead of the sweeper at night and carries a lighted lantern in his mouth. The other night as he was crossing the railroad track he stopped a minute to look back, and see if the sweeper was coming. Being a dog of happy disposition he wagged his tail, and incidentally his head wagged at the same time. The switching crew saw the light moving, and stopped their train. It moved again and they started, and the see-saw motion was kept up for some time, until the engineer was exhausted in operating his reverse lever. He jumped off and ran back to see what the signals meant, and when he saw the cause of it he said something. It is needless to say that after this he will work only on signals that are given higher from the ground.—Kansas City Journal.

Queen Adelaide.

Adelaide, queen consort of William IV., king of Great Britain and Ireland, was the eldest daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Meiningen, a state in Germany. Adelaide was born in the year 1792. She was truly pious, being so devout in her religious observances that she rarely took part in any of the simple and innocent forms of amusement so prevalent at that time in court circles. Indeed, it was this exemplary character which might be said to have won for her a king for a husband, for queen Charlotte of England, hearing of Adelaide's virtues, recommended her as a fitting companion for her third son, William, then duke of Clarence.

At Charlotte's suggestion negotiations for a marriage between her son and Adelaide were entered into. The match was speedily made, and the marriage took place in July, 1818.

Although Adelaide and William were the parents of several children, they all died in infancy. In 1830 George IV. died, and, having no children to succeed him, the crown reverted to his surviving brother, next in line, William.

During William and Adelaide's reign the court of England assumed a pure and elevating atmosphere, proving a model for the young, something which cannot be said of it at any former period.

In the year 1837 William IV. died, and as queen dowager Adelaide survived him twelve years. She was present at the marriage of the young and beautiful Queen Victoria and the charming Prince Albert. Much of her later life was spent in works of charity and religion. She also endeared herself to the people of England by the generous and upright course she

The Gamekeeper's Daughter.

In all the great, green, quiet park there was no little girl or boy to play with; but for all that, little Georgina, the head gamekeeper's daughter, never knew what it was to feel lonesome.

She had such a playground and such playfellows as most of us have at times dreamed of but none of us have in reality.

In the first place, she lived with her good father and mother in just such a thatched-roof, diamond-paned, rose-embowered cottage nesting beside a little mirror-like lake among century old trees, as one sees in picture books, and reads of in poems and songs of Old England.

Almost as far as she could see the level, green park stretched away, broken here and there by clumps of giant oaks, and beyond up against the sky was the blue line of hills that formed the edge of the world; and this lovely world was all her own, for, of course, Georgina, the only child, ruled in the pretty cottage as completely as her father lorded it over his many furred and feathered subjects.

In whatever direction she chose to wander she saw her playmates waiting, as she always supposed, for her to come and play with them.

On the little lake by the cottage floated and quacked and honked ducks of every color, white geese and gray, and black geese, and graceful, long-necked swans. At quite the other side of the lake she might see at the same time a herd of fallow deer, their brown bodies dappled with spots of snowy white, their heavy horns contrasting strangely with the slender tree-like horns of the red deer.

Innumerable little gray rabbits hopped noiselessly about in all directions, and English pheasants—the hens in modest buff, the cocks in gorgeous brown, blue and gold—darted swiftly among the underbrush; but the queerest of all her friends were the gray langaroos—"Hoppityhops" Georgina called them. The grounds around the cottage were fenced off from the surrounding park, but Georgina had so frequently accompanied her father outside in his search for pheasants' nests, or to see how the deer fared, that she felt perfectly at home even when alone.

Perhaps her greatest joy was in coaxing acquaintance with the timid baby deer. If she came suddenly upon one hiding in the grass or behind a stone, it frequently remained quite motionless, curled up into the smallest possible space and pressed flat to the ground, only its watchful eye proving that it was leafy and very anxious. In the leafy forest this would be its safest course, for there its protective coloring would render it almost invisible, but in the open park, on the green grass, its inherited instinct for concealment failed it, and it was all too visible to friend or foe. Georgina would creep up ever so quietly and sit down beside it. Sometimes she even succeeded in stroking its soft coat. Then the mother deer would circle anxiously around, coming as near as she dared, her great ears thrown forward, every nerve tense, and ready to spring away at the least hostile move; but it always ended by the fawn suddenly scrambling to its long thin legs, and, with little cries of alarm, dashing over the greensward to join its mother and find concealment in the deep shadows of the cool forest.—J. M. Gleeson in St. Nicholas.

Prices of Slaves.

"Slaves," said the Socialist, smiling grimly, "should be interested in the price of other slaves. Well, then: "Before the war a good strong man was worth $2500; a woman $1,500, a child, $500.

"In Rome, in the Golden Age, a laborer only cost $100, and, sometimes, after a great victory and an influx of captives into the capital, it was possible to buy strong, capable slaves for $5 apiece.

"Skilled slaves, men with trades, brought higher prices. Cicero paid $1000 for a scribe; Catiline had a cook that cost him $2500.

"A gardener was worth $300, a blacksmith $750, an actor $5000, a physician $10,000."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

FINANCE AND TRADE REVIEW

DUN'S WEEKLY SUMMARY

A Few Labor Disputes Are Pending, but There is Little Interruption to Industry.

Jobbing trade in fall and winter goods is active at the leading cities, country merchants being in large attendance and operating freely as a rule. Retail rates of reasonable merchandise are liberal, although at some points customary midsummer quiet is noted. While payments are somewhat peculiarly prevalent the collections show distinct improvement on the whole.

A few labor disputes are pending, but there is little interruption in the leading industries, most manufacturing plants working full time and holding orders that promise continued activity. Commodity prices are lower, especially in cases where speculative inflation existed favorable weather having greatly improved crop prospects.

New business in the iron and steel industry is light, and some quotations of pig iron are lower, but wire and wire products have become firmer, and many steel mills are sold well into the next year.

Steel rails are in better demand, a liberal tonnage of new contracts appearing this week, and material is sought by car shops and ship yards.

Textile mills are well occupied, except where the strike has interrupted the silk industry in Pennsylvania.

Bradstreet's says: "Cress currents in crop and trade developments render generalization difficult. Dispatches to Bradstreet's point to further favorable progress by leading crops, notably corn, cotton and spring wheat, but excepting oats reports from which are not favorable. In some large industries quieter trade is reported in some branches, with prices easing. Thus pig iron and some finished lines are reported lower on the week."

The women are working these days. The Chicago Tribune's Washington correspondent, examining some new statistics collected by the Census Bureau, finds that among the women of the United States between the ages of 16 and 20 one in three works for her living. They almost monopolize the work of typewriting and stenography. Of the 5,000,000 working women in the United States, 44 per cent. are between the ages of 16 and 24. The Chicago Tribune's correspondent argues from this that the girls get to work earlier than boys. It seems to be a matter of averages. The women quite generally marry at the age of 25, and only return to work when they are widowed or divorced. Only a quarter of the total number of male wage-earners are under 25 years of age, but the men work continuously throughout their lives.

Says the Washington Post: "The improvident thing about our 'foreign trade' is that nearly all our exports that are not made up of something to eat consist of raw materials, much of which our doctors of statistics class as manufactured products. The biggest item is cotton in the bale, that is the finished product of the farmer and the raw material of the spinner."

In the Cuticura Remedies I found immediate relief and was soon sound and well. C. V. Beltz, Tippecanoe, Ind., Nov. 15, 1905."

Concrete for Oil Tanks.

Experiments have been made to determine the availability of concrete for oil storage tanks, and it was found that the material was entirely suited for the purpose. Accordingly a number of them have been built at El Paso, Tex., by one of the railroad companies of that section, which is engaged in extensively handling oil from the fields of that state. Up to this time it was generally agreed that the presence of oil had some serious effect on the concrete, but if this is true, it was not shown by the experiments.
