Nature undoubtedly has a vegetable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man, if physicians can but find Nature's way to health. And this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation.

The bark of a certain troe in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Expytian Senial Singery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara bark is given its greatest possible power to correct constipation. A gestioned Candy Tablet, called Laxets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenuous and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Billiousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Sallow Complexion, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.

satisfying.

No griping, no unpleasant after effects are experienced, and Lax-ets are put up in beautiful lithographed metal boxes at 5 cents and 25 cents.

The Awakening of Charley.

By Josephine Wentworth.

When Charley sauntered into the yard and dropped down beside Jane on the old bench under the elm, he had in his mind just what he was gohad in his mind just what he was going to say—he had been rehearsing it all day—but when he was beside the little girl he had loved since chilahood, looking into her big, innocent blue eyes, he suddenly exame speechless so far as proposing went.

Jane was in her usual mood; quiet and confiding, telling him the hap-penings of the day. But Charley had something else on his mind, some-thing that he wanted to say, and most of her news fell on deaf ears
Jane noticed his abstraction and thinking that he was not interested, became silent.

For a long time neither spoke,

"Did you know that Ned Burley's cousin Violet, from Chiago, was coming to spend the them?" she asked. spend the summer with

"No."
"Ned says she is a dream."
"Stuck up, I'll bet."
"He says that she will have all the fellows in town in love with her be." fore she has been here two days "..." know one she'll not have,"

Charley declared.

That night, after he had gone, she That night, after he had gone, she stood before her mirror, critically studying the reflection therein. Jane was not what one would term pretty. Her features were regular, but her face was covered with a mass of tiny freckles.

Ned's boast that all the boys would be at her heels had not been in vain, and much to Jane's discomfiture, Charley was one of the foremost. To him Violet was a revelation, her red lips, bewitching dimples and dancing eyes played havoc with his heart. He wondered what on earth he could ever have seen in that freckle-faced, red-haired Jane.

Charley continued to call on Janesame as ever, but there was a difference in his attitude toward her. He looked upon her now as simply a friend of childhood and she accepted the changed condition of affairs with a fortitude that was pathetic had not Charley's eyes been blinded by the flashing charms of the frivolous Vic-

So passed the summer, and when fall came Violet began talking of re-turning to the city, and Charley awoke to the fact that for him life would become an empty void after she had gone. Then he asked her to

She threw him a saucy look, lowered her eyes demurely and said she would consider it. Charley had never made a study of human anture, executally people of Violet's stamp, and so foolishly went about in a dream of eestasy.

When the day for her departure, arrived he had not received his answer, and she promised to write to him as soon as she had spoken to her mother on the subject.

During the following week Jane her mother on the subject.

During the following week Jangsaw nothing of him, as his time was all taken up in dreaming of the future, and in going to and from his house to the post office.

Fianlly he was rewarded by receiving a dainty missive postmarked Chicago. He did not open it till he was safe from observation, then he tore it open with a wildly beating heart. A moment later he was staring at the sheet in amazement—it was not his letter at all, but was ing at the sheet in amazement—it was not his letter at all, but was written to a girl in New York.

Violet had written two letters and had put them in the wrong envelopes. He glanced over the pages until he came to the last paragraph, then his face paled and an angry then his face paled and an angry frown settled on his brow. He read frown settled on his brow. He read it over twice.

"And Minnie," if read, "you ought to have seen what proposed to me. I use to amuse myself in picking hayseed out of his hair, and he had such lovely hair, too. And just think, it was the only 'poo' I got all summer; not much like the exterience we had at the seashore a year ago. Well, I've written him a nice little letter of regret in which I told him that 'my ma won't let me. It may wake him up.

It did wake him up. It showed him a type with which he was wholly unfamiliar, and taught him a lesson that he would remember the rest of his life. And while he was thinking of what he had just read there came intruding into his mind a pair of big innocent blue eyes, and he imagined that he saw a look of sadness in their depths. Then he tore the letter into fragments and ground it into the earth with his heel.

Jane was sitting on the old bench under the elm. When he dropped down beside her he had no idea what he was going to say, or how he was go g to explain his conduct of the past few weeks; in fact he had expected that she might ignore him, as deserved. Out she didn't. And just how it happened he harlly knew, but he suddenly realized that she was in his arms, and he was calling her his little wife and smothering her with kisses.
