cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, scothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Oplum. Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put to nthe label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good! Here afterfor this very reasonmothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having

HOW I STUDY GIRLS

By an Experienced Bachelor.

I am afraid I am not much of a believer in character-reading from the features remarked the Bachelor to his room mate. When I am told that white spots on the finger-nats indicate fickleness, and thick eyebrows are a s.g. of constancy, have my doubts. There are som rules, in this world of queerness which seem chockfull of exception. That the hero on the stage interable is clean-shaven, or wears blonde moustache, and the villain has blonde moustache, and the villain has been looks and smakes unlink as raven locks and smokes nothing but cigarettes, traches us very little. I fear. One of the horridest cids I ever ran across owned a contenance like a cherub.

But with the opposite sex, I do feel toward a data that features

But with the opposite sex, I do feel tempted to admit that features to some extent match character. A man can be anything, whatever his face; but a girl tends to show her character in her face. At least, it's the other way round. Her face influences her characters, She lives up to her face, so to speak. And thus it is often said that a face indicates character, when in reality, it is character indicating the face, if one can put it that way.

You see, the face is—we may as well confess it frankiy—a far more valuable item in life's equipment to a girl than to a man. I don't see anything to be ashamed about in admitting this. Quite early in age a girl child realizes that her face is far more important to her than her brother's face is to him. It may be a pity that she should, but the fact remains that she does, and the realization influences her conduct. She ization influences her conduct. She begins to think a good deal about her face and her appearance. Not un-

FACE CAME BEFORE CHARACTER up to it. If she is pretty, she begins to have manners which are of the same species of prettiness. For ex-ample, if she is petite and doll-like, ample, if she is petite and doll-like, I do not see why we should be surprised that she avoids growing up with large, heavy, impressive manners. Something tells her that that type of manner would be out of key with her appearance. On the contrary, if she is tall and stately, she shuns a playful, kittenish manner. It would not "sit well" on her, any more than a bonnet sits well on a schoolgirl, or a hat on a grandmother of eighty.

And suppose she finds herself not pretty at all, but ugly! Is it compulsory on her to cultivate ugly manners? No. That's carrying my argament unrespondingly, and that men will admire her because plain mirl generally gets the most out of her plainness, and in so far as it is possible, lives up to it. The plain of the plainness, and in so far as it is norther has clever features. In a word, she looks sharp. And you will find that she is sharp. Perhaps she rad a mannish face. Well, you will find that her mind has bleen trained correspondingly, and that men will admire her because she can hold her own with them in arguing. Or prhaps she is plain, but not clever. Then you will find that she is strong in athleticism. Or maybe she has aftert sight and has to wear eyeglasses. Then she becomes bookish and learned. Then she becomes bookish and learned.

The eye-glassed girl proves my sint best of all. You have met, I im sure, dozens of girls who use eye-glasses; and you have noticed that they not only look learned, but are learned. It is one of the sure signs of the college girl, or if not the college girl, the girl who reads a lot. of the college girl—or if not the college girl, the girl who reads a lot. Well, according to some people, her appearance is due to her character. Yet what on earth have eyeglasses to do with character? Nothing. They are necessitated by bad sight, and in nine cases out of ten that bad sight is either hereditary, or else has, at any rate, been there from childhood. Almost all the eye-glassed brigade have worn spectacles since they were in short frocks—long before their character was formed. Finding themselves doomed to glasses, they have automatically lived up to the eyes nature gave them—just as the pretty girl with the doll-like complexion and the flaxen tresses has lived up to hers.

That's how it is that character-reading from the face is so often oddly correct in the case of girls and women, while hopelessly unreliable in men. There is no mystery about it. Exept when great sorrow, or illness or tremendous joy, affects a in men. There is no mystery about it. Except when great sorrow, or illness, or tremendous joy, affects a face, you may be certain that, to put it rudely, the face came before the character not the character before the face. If you bear this in mind you can become the cleverest character-diviner in the world. All kinds of girls are interesting and all kinds are pleasing, so much so that I never could pick out one special one.
