Stop That Cold

To check early colds or Grippe with "Preventics" means sure relief for Rheumatism. To stop a cold with Preventics is safer than to let it run and be obliged to cure it afterwards. To be sure, Preventics will cure even a deeply seated cold, but taken early—at the sneeze stage—they break, or head of these early colds. That's surely better. That's why they are called Preventics. Preventics are little Candy Cold Cures. No Quinine, no physic, nothing sickening. Nice for the children—and thoroughly safe too. If you feel chilly, if you sneeze, if you ache all over, think of Preventics. Promptness may also save half your usual sickness. And don't forget your child, if there is feverishness, night or day. Heroin probably lies Preventics' greatest efficiency. Sold in 5c boxes for the pocket, also in 25c boxes of 48 Preventics. Insist on your druggists giving you

"THE HANDY MAN."

A Man Always Around the House Isn't Good for Much Else.

"My husband is such a handy man around the house." I recently heard a wife remark with pride, says a writer in the April New Idea. She went on to tell how he could dry dishes when the maid was out, and even enjoyed getting a meal. It seems to me to be a popular fallacy among wives that a useful man about the house is the most desirable husband. I have noticed, however—my observation on this point, owing to my interest in the subject, has been wide—that the men who do a maid's work are the ones who don't make enough money to pay an extra maid for it.

Business, and the support of his family, is a man's work. Housekeeping and meeting domestic emergencies is a woman's, and when the two overlap it is usually to the detriment of both.

I know a man who tried to economize by employing his wife as his stenographer, but he soon found himself so underfed and badly taken care of at home that he changed his tactics. In the same way, a man who goes home tired and worried with business cares, cannot go back in the morning refreshed and renewed for the next day's campaign unless he finds recreation, rest and a reposeful atmosphere awaiting him. The better the home a wife makes her husband, the more money he is going to make for her to expend in lightening her household labor. If a wife is sick and the cook leaves and no one is to be had, any husband would be glad to get her breakfast and care for the house, and be none the worse for it. In the same way, any wife under similar circumstances would be glad to go to her husband's office, get his mail and send his telegrams; but one should be as much a matter of emergency as the other.

Another Word to the Wise

"Billy," she said, "be sure to bring all your money home to-night." And with a sigh she added— "Rent day to-morrow."

Billy sighed; they both sighed together—a duet, in fact—until she left him at it as an accompanist while she again took up her solo: "And Elizabeth needs a new dress and a new coat."

"You wouldn't think a baby's clothes would cost so much," said Billy sadly, still trying to reach a vulnerable part of his steak.

They returned to the duet, furioso, and this time he was the one to carry the air.

"When does the insurance man come?"

"To-morrow," she mourned. "No; you're getting him mixed with the furniture man. It's the furniture man who comes to-morrow."

"No," she said, "they both come to-morrow."

"What!" he asked, "both together?" And he looked up momentarily from his file of sole leather, as though to say, "This is too much!"

"I wonder," she said, "when we will be able to get new curtains for the front windows?"

He turned the steak over. "And look at the toes of my shoes," she continued.

"Look at the heels of mine," said William.

They gave a mutual look and found no comfort therein.

"The doctor was here yesterday," said she. "He said he was going past and just stepped in to see how we were, but I'm sure he was thinking of his bill. What's the matter, Billy, is your steak tough?"

"What makes you think so?" he asked in a nasty sort of a way.

"Why, the way you looked at it just then. Something awful."

"No," said he, cutting off a morsel. He held it on the end of his fork and gave his wife a proud, though sorrowful look, mutely calling her attention to the fact that he had won the battle.

"Do you think you'll be able to give him a little something next week, Billy?"

He ate his bit of steak with a stolid look of satisfaction and answered not.

"Do you, Billy?"

Still he ate his bit of steak, but this time he made an impatient motion of interrogation with his knife and fork.

"The doctor," she answered—"do you think you'll be able to give him a little something next week?"

"Maybe," mumbled Billy, "I don't know. Doesn't the grocer's bill and the butcher's bill come next week?"

"Yes—but we might put them off another week."

With a helpless motion he bolted his bit of steak, slapped the remainder with the flat of his knife, looked at it with an expression that said, "Au revoir; hash to-night," got up from the table and put on his straw hat.

"That reminds me," he called over his shoulder, "I shall have to get a new hat next week—or the week after." He started out, but pausing in the hall to slap his pockets he returned, saying:

"Can you let me have 10 cents for carfare, please?"

She kindly let him have it, and as he rode to the office with the dignified air (almost) of a family man enjoying a luxury, an old friend across the aisle saw him and made a glad sign.

He was a good old friend, he was; a gay, careless fellow; a devil-may-care sort of a sport who spent a third of his income on the necessities of life and blew in the other two-thirds with humor and despatch; he was a happy-faced fellow, Billy's old friend was, with a fine red color and a keen blue eye; dressed to perfection, too, he was, all the way from hat to heels, with rich jewelry breaking out all over him; in short, he was a bachelor, as any one could see from the manner in which he crossed the aisle, nudged Billy's ribs and laughed. "Hello, there, Old Battle-ship! Just the identical man I wanted to see! There's a little crowd of us going to take a cruise around the Horn to-night and you must join the fleet. Now I won't take 'No' for an answer. I haven't seen you for more than a year!"

"Haven't you heard," said Billy, "that I'm married and settled down?" "No!" exclaimed the other. "Well, well! Congratulations, old man! Congratulations!"

WHAT BILLY SHOULD HAVE SAID: "Congratulations for what, you blind ass?"

WHAT BILLY DID SAY: "Thanks, old man, thanks! I tell you now: There's nothing like it!" —New York Evening Sun.

Noise of Angels.

Englishman—You talk a lot about your side, but in London we have to take down all the chimneyspots every night to let the moon pass.

American—Wal, I guess I can beat that. Why, in New York nobody can get to sleep in the top stories owing to the angels making such a noise.—Ally Sloper's Half-Holiday.

The New System.

"I suppose you feel safer since the pure food laws have been passed."

"No. The only difference is that in order to enjoy my dinner I have to be careful to avoid reading the label."—Washington Star.

Unpardonable Offense.

Ned—What did they blackball Jones at the club for?

Ted—Heard that he pays his tailor bills within two years!

Benefited.

"Has your son benefited by his stay abroad?"

"Yes. When he used to say the weather was bad he now says the 'climate is beauty!'"

He Answered Quickly.

"Will you have this here woman to be your lawful, wedded wife?"

"That's what I 'lowed I would."

"Will you love, honor and obey her?"

"Ain't you got that switched round, parson?" said the bridegroom.

"John!" said the bride-elect, "don't you reckon the parson knows his business? Answer the question!"

"Yessir," said the groom, meekly; "I reckon I'll have to!" —Atlanta Constitution.

His Favorite.

Musician—What is your favorite Italian production?

The Other—Spaghetti!

CAMBRIDGE

Reversible Sulky Plow

The Cambridge Reversible Sulky Plow is the highest type of plow of the twentieth century—constructed on correct scientific and mechanical principles. It is the result of a constant endeavor to produce a perfect riding plow, and has 62 years experience in plow making back of it. The demand of the times has been for a better riding plow—something that meets that demand and only needs to be tried to convince the farmer that it is the superior of any riding plow ever before produced. It will do splendid work equally well on level land or on the hill-side; will leave the soil smooth and free of ridges and dead furrows; works with light draft than any hand plow doing the same work—easy on man and team. Made in two sizes and from the best malleable iron and high grade steel; improved and extra heavy steel wheels with dust cap and removable chilled boxes. Easy to manage, always under perfect control.
