On the Spreewald.

Even at the beginning of the eighteenth century almost the whole area of the Spreewald was an impenetrable forest. Now however, the forest does not occupy more than a fifth part of the Spreewald. It is computed that nearly 50,000 tourists visit the Spreewald annually.

There is something weird and uncanny in the superstitious character of the inhabitants of the Spreewald. The most fanatical legends are related and believed by these simple peasants, says House and Garden. An night the old Wencic King is said to ride headless over the hill. Black men are alleged to be seen by the peasants at dawn; at dusk women clad in white are said to "walk" the forest. As soon as deep holes are bored in the hill, great serpents raise their heads. These legends are solemnly believed by the Wends.

In the warm weather almost all the traffic is carried on in boats. The boat carries the Spreewald to baptism, takes him to the happiest festival of his life—his wedding—and finally bears him on his journey in his coffin to his last resting place. When winter stretches its crystal bridges over the Spreewald the skating and sleighing begin between the various villages.

The Optical Lever.

The delicate measurements demanded by modern scientific processes and machines have led to the invention of many instruments of precision that surpass the uninitiated by their capabilities, which are often based on extremely simple principles. Among these is a little apparatus recently put upon the market in France for determining the thickness, or, one might say, lack of thickness, of extremely thin plates, wires and threads. The inventor likens its action to that of a lever, in which a ray of light takes the place of the beam. Essentially the apparatus consists of two carefully ground plates in contact with one another, the upper one being attached to a movable arm. When an object is placed between the edges of the plates the upper plate is displaced a little in level, and the effect of this displacement is magnified by a reflected ray of light which falls upon a graduated scale. Thus the most delicate measurements of thickness are easily and quickly made.

Work of College Graduates.

One of the Yale professors has been making a study of the occupations of Yale graduates by classes. He finds among other things, that a constantly lessening number are entering the ministry and a steadily increasing number are studying law. The law now claims more than twice as many as any other profession. Next to it comes finance. Fewer than one-twelfth of the graduates enter the ministry, in spite of the fact that one of the purposes for which Yale was founded was "to train godly young men for the Christian ministry." But, side by side with these facts, it is also noted that charitable and philanthropic work—the giving both of money and of service—is yearly claiming a larger share of the interest of educated men and women.

When Snow is Smoke.

When the chemist inserts a small jet of flaming hydrogen into a vessel of liquid oxygen the hydrogen continues to burn, giving off snow instead of smoke. The snow is formed by the instantaneous freezing of the water created by the combination of the burning hydrogen with the oxygen inclosing it. When liquid air is cooled until it becomes semi-solid it is found that the oxygen may be drawn out of the mass by means of a magnet, leaving a jelly of pure nitrogen.

A Ready Answer.

From a German newspaper an observer has culled the following advertisement: "The gentleman who found a purse with money in the Blumenstrasse is requested to forward it to the address of the loser, as he is recognized." The response appeared two days later: "The recognized gentleman who picked up a purse in the Blumenstrasse requests the loser to call at his house at a convenient day."

Preserving Iron and Steel.

To keep iron and steel goods from rust, states the Mechanical World, dissolve half an ounce of camphor in one pound of hog's lard; take off the scum, mix as much black lead as will give the mixture an iron color. Iron and steel goods rubbed over with this mixture and left with it on 24 hours, and then dried with a linen cloth, will keep clean for months.

Graft in Hospitals.

Grave charges are being made against the public hospitals of Paris. Not many years have elapsed since the nursing sisters were expelled and already the tip system infects them from top to bottom like a dry rot. The poorest must pay or suffer neglect.

An Appropriate Nickname.

Lord Lister, the distinguished British surgeon who recently joined the army of octogenarians, is known in court circles as "Lord Deliverus." He has been present at the birth of every prince and princess in Great Britain for more than a generation.

A SENTIMENTAL BURGLAR

By Ernest Roeser.

He knew how to step lightly and "jimmy" the long French window in the dark corner of the veranda, so he must have understood his business. No amateur burglar could have effected entrance into the house so neatly and surely.

And after he was in the room he exercised the same deliberate care, the seeming unconcern, and sat down by a smouldering fire to warm his hands. When he was comfortable he surveyed the room with an electric flash lamp, and then calmly ransacked the tall desk in the corner. One drawer was locked, but he tool it with ease and then, for the first time, evidenced excitement, scooped out its contents.

"Seventeen dollars," he muttered disdainfully. "Hardly worth taking. But he had no idea of leaving it, evidently, for he carefully stowed the bills in his vest pocket."

He continued his search of the room, picked up a trinket here and something there, all of which he placed in the middle of the table, preparatory to wrapping them together when his task was finished.

In one corner of the room, the glow and his flash lamp glinted on the shining, polished surface. He reached into the shadow and lifted a 'cello into the dim light of the fire. After examining the instrument critically, he dropped its base to the floor, and, as he idly swung it to and fro, seemed speculating. Then he looked at the instrument long and intensely and sat down in meditation. He unconsciously thumbed the strings and the touch evidenced a knowledge of the instrument.

"If I had a chance to run the bow over the strings for a minute or two," he muttered, "I might be able to tell its worth. It's too big and suspicious a package to carry away at this time of the night, and then, after all, it may not be genuine."

After a short pause, he arose abruptly, like one with his mind made up. He walked softly and quickly to the door leading out of the room, closed it, went to the corner, and then returned to the instrument with the bow in his hand.

"I'll chance it," he said below his breath.

Softly—very softly—he drew the bow across the strings, and then, after tuning a little, he tested, with the anxiety of a purchaser, the qualities of the 'cello. If it was a good one, he would take it—if not, it was not worth the trouble and risk. Evidently he was hard pressed for money when he was quite willing to steal anything that might be converted into cash.

As he played, very low, a note seemed to catch a vein of song and climbed sweetly until it swayed in tender, sweet and trembling notes.

Sometimes it seemed that he was playing on the heart-strings of a woman, and she was weeping, more in sorrow than pain. Then again, he was conversing with his soul, and the melody ran on the strings until it found a man's voice and floated in the air. He laughed and cried, he sang and then moaned and all the time his lips parted, his head and body swayed and he seemed to be unconscious of where he was, how he came to be there, and of everything else.

He did not hear the door softly opened, nor did he see the figure of a young girl, her dark hair falling on the cloak she had thrown around her, and her face expressed wonderment, fear and admiration all at once. She stood immovably by the doorway, listening, and she, too, became lost in the wonderful melody produced by the burglar artist. And then—

A coal in the fire grate snapped and, with a nervous start, he leaped to his feet, turning about swiftly. Instinctively he knew that he was not alone in the room. The girl pressed her hands to her bosom, and shrank against the wall. For fully a minute they surveyed each other and then, the girl, breaking the spell, made a movement toward the door as if to flee. He quickly raised his hand.

"Stop!" he said. "You need have no fear. I—I am sorry that I so forgot myself as to arouse you." And he seemed ashamed that he had been so unprofessional.

"Who are you?" she cried. "And what are you doing here?"

"Who I am," he said bitterly, "makes no difference. As to why I am here, I was trying to letter my condition with anything I might find." Pointing toward the window, he continued: "I came in there. I was fortunate enough to find this instrument in the corner and then I was fool enough to allow it to betray me. I guess it's about time I'm going."

"It's yours, isn't it?" he asked, singly.

She nodded her head, too frightened to speak.

"I guessed as much—otherwise I would take it with me. It's a grand instrument. Do you play it?"

Again she nodded, then, with effort, she hastily added:

"But not like you—not like you!"

"You must study—study hard. You have the face of an artist."

He walked toward the window to depart, when recollecting himself, he took the $17 he had stolen from the desk and dropped it on a table.

He stepped onto the veranda and, before closing the window, he took a last look at the girl, who still stood like a statue near the doorway.

"You must study hard," he said, and was gone.

Indigestion

Stomach trouble is but a symptom of, and not in itself a true disease. We think of Dyspepsia, Heartburn, and Indigestion as real diseases, yet they are symptoms only of a certain specific Nerve sickness—nothing else.

It was this fact that first correctly led Dr. Shoop in the creation of that now very popular Stomach Remedy—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Going direct to the stomach nerves, alone brought that success and favor to Dr. Shoop and his Restorative. Without that original and highly vital principle, no such lasting accomplishments were ever to be had.

For stomach distress, bloating, biliousness, bad breath and sallow complexion, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—and see for yourself what it can and will do. We sell and cheerfully recommend

BUSH & GERTS PIANOS

The prestige of age and the high-born honor of a good name are precious things in the esteem of the people; but the credit for keeping the same good "making good" with a high art product, is quite as potential and essential in this present-day practical age.

The Bush and Gerts Piano has been before the public twenty-one years, has consequently attained its majority, and has never been found wanting in possessing all the essential of a first-grade instrument. The fact that over forty thousand Bush and Gerts Pianos have been placed in American homes, and in a large number of educational institutions East and West, indicates its admirable appreciation and its vast sphere of influence.

Send for a list of 2000 patrons; also Catalogue and the name of nearest dealer handling Pianos. Always insist upon the Manufacturers' name being cast in the plate and placed on the fall-board of any Piano you buy. A postal will bring you a beautiful souvenir free. Live agents wanted in unoccupied territory.
