LOCAL LUNCHEON.

Hay fever time. The kite season. Cookies are plenty 'tis said. A good time to visit the country. Mistletoe carpets swept with salt. The badge button fall seems to have spent itself. The preserving and canning season keeps the housewife busy. After-dinner coffee is now sweetened with granulated rock-candy. The new waded potato, of diminutive size, has put in its appearance. If you never carry a revolver you will never shoot anybody accidentally. Some of the costumes of the summer girl remind one of the peach crop. It is a case of the yellow. A false alarm of fire last evening brought out the fire department. State Treasurer Hoyer will now pay the school warrants.

WANT TO LYNCH HIM.

Katie Gargano's Murderer in Danger of Being Hanged.
HARRISTON, Pa., July 30.—When Giuseppe DeComali, accused of the murder of Katie Gargano, stepped off the train at the depot he saw a crowd of excited people that blocked up the platform and extended across the street. When the crowd caught sight of him they made a rush and cries of "lynch him" were heard. The officers who had him in charge were pressed against the car with their prisoner, and all the crowd wanted to carry out their purpose was a leader. The police after considerable difficulty succeeded in pushing their way through and hurried Comali into one of the upper rooms of the depot, where he was given a hearing. The evidence against him is mainly circumstantial. He was held in $1,000 bail.

When the news of Comali's capture reached Lattimer, the home of the murdered girl, the Italians threatened to come to Hazelton and back him to pieces. The mine officials succeeded in quieting them. William Dennis and Salvatore D. Sandoia, two prominent Italians, asked the police to surrender Comali to a society composed of Italians, of which they are the principal officers. They said that the society was determined to hang Comali as a warning to other lawless Italians, and if necessary they would go the Wilkesbarre and take him out of court and do it.

CAPT. ARMES PARDONED.

He Insulted Gov. Beaver During the Inauguration of President Harrison.
CAPE MAY, N. J., July 30.—The President has pardoned Capt. George J. Armes, U. S. A., under sentence of court-martial for conduct unbecoming an officer and general. The offense was committed during the inauguration of President Harrison. Capt. Armes had some difficulty with the Pennsylvania troops. He afterwards met Gov. Beaver in his hotel and publicly insulted him. Court-martial sentenced him to be dismissed from the service. The President commuted the sentence as far as to require Armes to confine himself within an area of 50 miles of Washington, D. C.

Yesterday's Picnic.

Two ice cars, with every coat filled and many standing, took the several Sunday picnics between Shenandoah and Mahanoy Falls to Lakeside yesterday. Five more carloads came from Ringtown and the Catawissa Valley. At noon many more, who failed to get off on the morning train, joined the picnickers. The day was delightful, every one had a pleasant time and nothing occurred to mar the pleasures of the party.

Ignorant "Sam."

"Sam" Hollister gets off the following story as part of the examination he went through before he was admitted to the Bar. The oldest member of the examining committee interrogated him: "Are you familiar with any game of chance?" "No, sir." "Don't you know how to play any game of cards?" "No, sir." "Surely you understand euchre?" "Never heard of it before." "It isn't possible you never indulged in a game of poker?" "Yes, sir, it is. I am a member of the church and don't know one card from another." "Well (after a long pause of astonishment), young man, we'll give you a license, but how in the world you're going to make a living for the first two or three years after you start practicing law is a mystery to us."

She Wouldn't Shake.

A woman went into Charley Hagenbuch's drugstore the other evening to have a prescription filled. Charley compounded the drugs, and as he handed the bottle to his customer, he said, pleasantly: "Here's your prescription, ma'am—shak!" "I'll do nothing of the kind," snarped the woman, "and I think you've a good deal of impudence to ask me to." "You don't understand," exclaimed the druggist; "I mean that when you take the prescription you must shake."

LIVED OVER A CENTURY.

Grandpa Brooks, of Michigan, Is Over 105 Years Old.
John Brooks, of Waldron, Mich., recently celebrated the 105th anniversary of his birth.

Mr. Brooks was born at Hancock, N. H., June 17, 1786. He is thought to be of Scotch-Irish descent, although his ancestry has not been definitely traced beyond New England. The first twenty-six years of his life were spent with his father on the farm. His education was only such as the average farmer-boy of that day received—a few months in winter at the log school house. His parents were strictly Christian, and he was trained in all the rigidity of the Puritan doctrine. Tobacco he never used in any form and an oath was never heard to escape his lips. The worst language he remembers using was when he charged a cow with being possessed with the devil, and he has always regretted that he did not speak of her instead as a bad cow, which he thinks would have answered just as well.

Shortly before the war of 1812 Mr. Brooks left the farm and at the village of Milford in the same state, engaged as an apprentice in the blacksmith shop of an older brother. Near the close of the war his brother was drafted, and to obey the summons and leave a dependent family, Young Brooks, who was still single, promptly offered to go as substitute. Existing, he served for three months in the capacity of cook, and the war having closed was honorably discharged. He has forgotten his company and the number of his regiment, but remembers Col. John Steele as the commander. He returned to Hancock, where two years later he was united in marriage to Miss Deidamia Brooks, of that village. The venerable wife died in 1869. From this union came nine children, five of whom, three sons and two daughters, are now living: John, at Lickley's Corner; William, at Reed City, James, at Walacon, Deidamia, at Jackson, and Charlotte at Harrison. Soon after his marriage Brooks emigrated to Unadilla, N. Y. There, after a few years at farming, he resolved to come still further west, and again fixing up his emigrant wagon pushed out. He was headed for northern Ohio or southern Michigan, but meeting at Cattaraugus a returning party from the west, he was so discouraged by their report of the country that he settled at Cattaraugus, and remained for twenty years, while in a sawmill. In 1843 he put into execution his resolve to come to Michigan, settling in Pittsford township, where he worked a farm for twenty-eight years and then removed in 1871 to the homestead in Wright township, where he now resides with his son James. Five years ago his 100th birthday was publicly celebrated in a grove near his home, where there were over 4,000 people assembled in honor of the occasion. Three brass bands, several G. A. R. posts, and various other organizations were in attendance.
