Mrs. Darvall attempted to wrest the revolver from her brother. He pulled the trigger twice and sent two bullets into the sister's breast, killing her almost instantly.

ONE HUNDRED DEAD

Charred Bodies Taken from the Ruins in New York.

OVER EIGHTY STILL MISSING.

Men Work All Night Trying to Clear Up the Wreck.

Derriets Will Have to be Used to Remove the Machinery—Crows Visit the Scene of the Disaster—Sad Nights at the Hospital and Morgue—Trying to Identify the Dead.

NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—When the bodies of all the unfortunate men and women buried into eternity by the collapse of the buildings Nos. 68, 70, 72 and 74 Park place on Saturday have been recovered, it will be found that the fearful list will contain 110 names.

Sixteen of the mangled and burnt bodies were taken out up to last midnight. Eight were taken out up to Saturday night and eight more were recovered to the next twenty-four hours.

At 11:30 o'clock last night the Italians were put to work again at removing the debris, and half an hour later two bodies were found near a mass of machinery.

The bodies were lying at about the foot of the stairway of No. 72 Park place. Both were bodies of men, and one of them wore a blue jumper and jean overalls. The other wore striped trousers.

Both bodies were terribly crushed and burnt. Deputy Coroner Collin, who viewed them, said that he believed there were fifteen more bodies within a few feet of them.

These two discovered could not be removed, as the whole mass would come down upon the workmen and crush them. The missing list now numbers eighty.

There is little hope that any of these escaped, as they would have notified the anxious relatives who gave their names to the police.

Anxious Watchers.

Around the scene of the disaster anxious persons stood watching the men at work, peering into the ruins on the lookout for missing friends. The cordon of police detailed to guard the fire lines were kept busy throughout the night and day keeping the people back.

Among the anxious watchers all last night were three young women and a young man. They were looking for some missing friend, but they did not say who it was. Finally the escort of the ladies told a policeman that one of them was the fiancee of A. B. Peterson, son of the proprietor of the restaurant, who is among the missing.

Two other bodies were recognized later on as Gustave Zickler, of 310 Washington street, Holoken, and Leonard Cole, of Bedford avenue, Brooklyn.

INCIDENTS OF THE DAY.

Women With Tear-Stamped Faces Keep Their Eyes on the Rescuers.
NEW YORK, Aug. 24.—By 8 o'clock at least 2,000 people were assembled at the ends of the block at Cottage place and Greenwich street, and as the day wore on their number increased rapidly.

Finally the police found themselves unable to keep the throng in check, and by order of Inspector Williams ropes were stretched across the street. For this expedient failed in its purpose, for one of the ropes was cut, and after awhile they were replaced by stout telegraph wires, against which the crowds surged in vain.

It was noticeable that the throng was composed of in the main of morbidly curious persons. They could see literally nothing except the great gap on the south side of the street and an occasional figure of a fireman looping up through the smoke, yet hour after hour they stood patiently in the boiling sunlight, bound by a fearful fascination.

Here and there in the front ranks might be detected an anxious face that gazed fixedly at the wreck, knowing full well that some loved one lay beneath it, but these were few. A number of vendors of lemonade, fruit and tea water took advantage of the opportunity to erect stands on the shady side of Park place, above College place, and they were liberally patronized.

Within the police lines a still more singular crowd was assembled. All who were fortunate enough to own an establishment or be employed upon the block were there to see the fearful show. Many of them brought their sister and wives and provided them with seats beneath awnings and at windows where they could have the best possible view of the scene of death and not fall to witness every horrible detail attendant upon the removal of the bodies.

There were other women there, too—women with tear-stamped faces and quivering lips, who kept their eyes fixed on the rescuers and burst into frantic weeping as body after body was brought out in the awful dread that it might be that of some dearly loved one.

Mothers watched thus for sons and wives for husbands, and sides by side with them there sat women who were drawn to the spot by no more worthy motive than that of curiosity.

What Caused the Accident.
The Fire Marshal is making a rigid examination in the matter and it is not at all unlikely that some one may be called to a strict account for the awful calamity. The fire chief is of the opinion that there was an explosion of gas or charcoal and this together with heavy machinery in the building pulled the structure down.
