Boxer Haley Dies From Hitting His Wife's Insulter.

STRUCK THE MAN IN THE TEETH

The Wound Very Slight, But It Brought On Blood-Poisoning.

Amputation Would Have Saved Haley, But He Wouldn't Have B-His Wife's Insulter Said to Have Been a Custom House Inspector-No Clue to His Iden-

New York, Sep. 24.—Prof. James Haley, the well known lightweight pugilist and teacher of the art of sulfdefense, died yesterday afternoon at the Long Island Hotel, from blood-poisoning, arising from a slight wound in the hand received while avenging an insult to his wife.

Mrs. Haley, who is a very attractive young woman, was on her way home from Harlem on the evening of Saturday, the 12th inst., where she had been visit-ing her mother, when on leaving the elevated station at Fulton street, she was accosted by a stranger who had been en deavoring to attract her attention on the

She pushed past the fellow, who, however, followed her closely. As she reached the hotel, and was in the act of reached the hotel, and was in the act of closing the door, the man pushed it open and forced his way in. Mrs. Haley screamed for help, and her husband, who was up stairs came running down. The insulter ran. Mr. Haley caught him, and dealt him a blow in the mouth. As he scrambled to his fact the stranger shricked, "I'm a Custom House inspector and I'll make you pay for this!" and thea ran away. Haley laughed at the threat and hurried home to console his wife, who was crying bitterly.

Then he discovered blood trickling from a ring cut between the knuckles of his second and third fligors, evidently inflicted by the front teeth of his antagonist. It seemed so trifling that he contented himself with washing away the blood and applying a bit of sticking

A day or two afterward the wound showed signs of inflammation, and soon the hand began to swell in an alarming manner.

It grew rapidly worse until umputation was suggested. This, however, Haley would not hear of. Had be yielded to the doctors' wishes, there is little doubt that his life would have been a terminate to the doctors.
